Abstract	The increase of refugee status claiming immigrants in Canada has led to a review of the immigration policy concerning this group. This report looks at the weaknesses of current legislation which is linked to the Geneva Convention and its Protocol, studying Canada's past adherence to the rights afforded under its protection. Also discusses public and government opinion on support for a humanitarian and generous refugee policy and questions of balancing efficiency with procedural fairness to claimants. Gives a chronology of events since 1969.

Introduction

The Canadian Research Index - Microlog puts all of Canada's hard-to-find government and research literature at your fingertips. Canadian Research Index in print is a monthly indexing and abstracting service. An electronic version on CD-ROM or via the Internet is also available. Microlog represents our fulltext document service. Most titles included in Canadian Research Index are available in paper as well as microfiche format. Together, these services are a powerful tool for finding Canadian report publications.

The Canadian Research Index includes scientific and technical research papers in physical, natural and social sciences. It also includes policy papers, important statistical publications, and annual reports.

Documents issued in English or French are catalogued, indexed and abstracted in the language of the publication, while bilingual documents are catalogued, indexed and abstracted in both languages.

Every effort is made to ensure the currency of the index. For instance, documents appearing in the checklist of Canadian Government Publications are delivered by the Microlog Service approximately two months after publication of the list.

SOURCES

- government publications from the federal, provincial and municipal levels
- depository publications of reference value
- non-depository publications issued by government organizations, laboratories and research centres
- non-profit organizations, educational institutions and research groups
- some monographs and serials issued by Statistics Canada

ORGANIZATION

Canadian Research Index comprises the following sections:

Titles and abstracts: A full bibliographic citation and a descriptive abstract for each title.

Corporate name index: Access by controlled format corporate names based on Canadiana Authorities.

Personal name index: Access by personal name.

Subject index: Subject terms based on Library of Congress and Canadian Subject Headings are assigned to each document. A cross-referencing structure assists searchers.

Series titles: Lists by title and numbers all reports in a series; series are available as an on-going subscription or retrospective collection.

Microfiche collections: Lists contents of each fiche collection for quick reference. These collections can be used as current awareness lists in broad subject areas to notify users of new acquisitions.

ELECTRONIC ACCESS

The full Canadian Research Index file from 1982 to date is available in electronic formats on the SilverPlatter SPIRS platform. It is accessible on CD; it may be licensed for network use on a local server or on a SilverPlatter ERL server; and it is available for Internet subscription. Reports may be ordered through the National Technical Information Service in the U.S.A., or directly through IHS/Micromedia's Global Information Centre. All catalogued documents issued by Statistics Canada are now included in electronic versions of Canadian Research Index. For information, contact IHS/Micromedia's CD Centre at 1-800-387-2689.

DOCUMENT DELIVERY

The unique Microlog Accession Number is the key to immediate retrieval of any document. Most documents cited in Canadian Research Index are available as part of the Microlog Microfiche Subscription Service, institutions may subscribe to complete or partial collections of the documents in the Index. Individual copies on microfiche or paper reprints may be ordered through IHS/Micromedia's Document Delivery Service. To order, please contact:

Introduction

Microlog : Index de recherche du Canada met à votre disposition toutes les publications du gouvernement et les travaux de recherche difficiles à se procurer. L'Index de recherche du Canada imprimé est un service mensuel d'indexation et de résumés. Une version électronique est également offerte sur CD-ROM ou dans Internet. Microlog représente notre service de documents en texte intégral. La plupart des titres figurant dans l'Index sont disponibles sous forme imprimée et sur microfiche. Ces services combinés constituent un outil très efficace pour retrouver les publications des différents gouvernements du Canada.

L'Index contient entre autres des recherches en sciences physiques, naturelles et sociales, des énoncés de politique, des statistiques et des rapports annuels.

Les ouvrages publiés en français ou en anglais sont indexés et résumés dans la langue de publication; les ouvrages bilingues sont traités dans les deux langues.

De vastes efforts sont déployés pour assurer la pertinence de l'index. Par exemple, on peut obtenir les documents qui figurent sur la Liste des publications du gouvernement du Canada environ deux mois après leur parution sur cette liste.

- publications fédérales, provinciales et municipales
- publications déposées servant de référence
- publications non déposées publiées par les organismes gouvernementaux, les laboratoires et les centres de recherche
- publications d'organismes à but non lucratif, d'établissements d'enseignement et de groupes de recherche
- certaines monographies et publication en série publiées par Statistique Canada

ORGANISATION DE L'INDEX

Titres et résumés: tous les titres sont catalogués et accompagnés d'un résumé descriptif.

Index des dénominations sociales: donne un accès par dénominations sociales fondées sur les vedettes d'autorité du service Canadiana.

Index des noms: donne un accès par auteur.

Index des matières: des descripteurs fondés sur les vedettes matières des documents Library of Congress Subject Headings et Canadian Subject Headings sont associés à chaque publication; un réseau de renvois facilite la recherche.

Titres de collections: tous les rapports publiés en série sont classés par titre et numéro. Ces documents sont disponibles par le biais d'un abonnement permanent et ils sont aussi intégrés à une collection rétrospective.

Collections de microfiches: chaque collection apparaît dans une section séparée pour faciliter la recherche. Ces listes peuvent aussi servir à renseigner les usagers sur les nouveautés.

ACCÈS ÉLECTRONIQUE

Le fichier complet de l'Index de recherche du Canada, de 1982 à aujourd'hui, est disponible sous forme électronique à partir de la plate-forme SilverPlatter SPIRS. Il est offert sur CD-ROM et il est possible d'obtenir des licences d'utilisation en réseau pour un serveur local ou pour un serveur SilverPlatter ERL. Il est également disponible par le biais d'un abonnement Internet. Les rapports peuvent être commandés par l'intermédiaire du National Technical Information Service aux États-Unis ou encore directement au Global Information Centre de IHS/Micromedia. Tous les documents catalogués publiés par Statistique Canada sont intégrés dans les versions électroniques de l'Index de recherche du Canada. Pour plus de détails, contactez le personnel de IHS/Micromedia au 1 800 387-2689.

LIVRAISON DE DOCUMENTS

Le numéro d'accès unique de Microlog est la clé qui permet de repérer immédiatement tout document. La majorité des documents cités dans l'Index de recherche du Canada sont offerts par le service d'abonnement aux microfiches de Microlog. Les organismes peuvent s'abonner à l'ensemble ou à certaines des collections de documents de l'Index. On peut également commander des reproductions de documents sur microfiches ou sur papier par l'intermédiaire du service de livraison de documents de IHS/Micromedia. Sample CRI Search

“How can a person from a foreign country qualify for refugee status in Canada?”

The researcher can search in CRI as in any library catalogue - by subject, author and title.
Because the index is bilingual, searching can be done in English or in French.

Recherche type avec IRC

“Comment une personne d'un pays étranger peut-elle demander le statut de réfugié au Canada?”

La méthode de recherche dans IRC est la même que dans une bibliothèque, puisque les documents sont indexés par auteur, par sujet et par titre. L'index étant bilingue, la consultation peut se faire en français ou en anglais.

STEP 2/DEUXIÈME ÉTAPE

A unified search strategy

The search strategy should include all the monthly issues. Start with the most recent issue and work back.
Monthly issues are cumulated annually.

Établir une stratégie de recherche unifiée

La stratégie de recherche doit tenir compte de toutes les publications mensuelles, à commencer par les plus récentes. Chaque année, ces publications font l'objet d'une refonte.

STEP 3/TROISIÈME ÉTAPE

Retrieve the publication

Each bibliographic citation gives a full description of the relevant document. Locate the document by the microfiche number in the library's collection or order from Micromedia. Individual publications are available for purchase on microfiche or paper. The bibliographic description provides publisher source information.

Repérer la publication

Chaque notice bibliographique comprend une description complète du document; celui-ci peut être repéré grâce au numéro de microfiche de la bibliothèque; sinon, il faut le commander à Micromedia. On peut se procurer les monographies sur microfiches ou sur papier. La description bibliographique comporte également des indications sur l'éditeur.

Halifax : Dept. of Health, 1997. 32 p. : Ill., Bibl.

The transition to a regionalized and fully integrated health care system in Nova Scotia substantially changed the flow of accountability in the system. This policy paper defines the new accountability relationship between the Minister of Health and the regional health boards/non-designated organizations, and between the regional health boards and community health boards. It also specifies how the Dept. of Health, regional and community health boards, and non-designated organizations will support each other in carrying out their lateral and reciprocal responsibilities in the regionalized and fully integrated health care system. The paper explains the responsibilities of the various partners to each other; what accountability is and how it is demonstrated within the system; key elements in the accountability process; and the application of the process.

Reviews operations carried out in two Ontario aerial herbicide spraying programs. The conifer release program, which involved spraying of Vision and 2,4-D over 15,683.5 hectares of forest land, was intended to suppress vegetation that competes with conifer seedlings for light, moisture, and nutrients. The site preparation program, which involved spraying the same herbicides over 2,561.9 hectares in seven districts, was intended to remove competing vegetation from sites that were to be planted with conifers. Information presented for the programs includes costs, areas sprayed by district and township, aircraft registrations and flying time, and a summary of incidents (such as herbicide spills and oversprays) that occurred during the programs.

The purpose of this study is to review and compare regulations and policies that control and influence the mining of aggregate resources in British Columbia and Ontario. These two provinces have fundamentally different approaches to regulating this resource: a high degree of central control in Ontario versus detailed control at the municipal level in British Columbia. An overview of the aggregate industry notes the physical characteristics of aggregates, their production and consumption, and the features of the aggregates industry that tend to make policy issues complex and of significant impact on a large proportion of the population. This is followed by a review of each province's regulations and policies: for Ontario, the history of the policy system is described in detail, while for British Columbia the emphasis is on describing and analyzing a range of municipal bylaws. The final chapter provides a comparative analysis of each policy regime, results observed, and problems being faced in each province.

This publication is a compilation of the more important findings of an intersectoral United Nations exercise headed by its Panel on Technology for Basic Needs, which conducted an in-depth study of the use of science and technology (S&T) for small-scale economic activities to address the basic needs of low-income populations. Basic needs are defined as the minimal requirements to sustain life (nutrition, health care, water, and sanitary facilities) as well as access to education and information that enable individuals and communities to be productive and to make rational use of the available basic goods and services. The publication offers analyses of poverty eradication and the role of S&T with respect to sustainable human development, technical and vocational education, health, and small-scale economic activity, among other issues.

The purpose of this study is to determine the extent to which resource studies have been included in the curricula of Canadian elementary and secondary schools in recent years, the content and context of such studies, and possible strategies for enhancing the prominence of resource studies in the Canadian school system. The study involved several steps: a cross-country survey of deputy ministers of education and curriculum directors to determine the extent of resource education and its importance in terms of provincial educational goals; analysis of curriculum guidelines for those areas related to natural resources; interviews with 296 teachers regarding their opinions on resource studies; and a survey of a sample of first-year university students examining their awareness and understanding of resource-related concepts and issues covered during their elementary and secondary years. The final section presents overall conclusions and recommendations for stakeholders involved with resources and resource-based education, including government policymakers, resource industries, educators, parents, and students.

The so-called smart card is a technology that can store a large amount of data, with the capability to carry out data identification, security, and management operations. This report describes a smart card pilot project that stemmed from the observation that clinical information is dispersed and that the lack of communication between various health workers adversely affects the effectiveness of health care. The smart card used in the project had five data fields and was issued to four target groups in the Rimouski region of Quebec: seniors, pregnant women, infants, and residents of St-Fabien. Health care workers had varying levels of access to information on the cards. The report discusses the ethical and legal framework for the smart card project, notably the concerns about access and confidentiality of health information, and assesses the project in terms of project operation, user attitudes, compliance with legal obligations and guidelines, confidentiality and security of information on the cards, and the right to access and to correct that information. The appendix includes text from relevant legislation regarding information access and privacy.

Il est de plus en plus souvent question dans la presse et dans les discussions publiques des normes ou des droits "fondamentaux" du travail et surtout de leur non-respect par les pays en développement. En particulier, les États-Unis et la France, appuyés par des défenseurs des droits de la personne et des syndicats, réclament l'application de ces normes par l'Organisation mondiale du commerce. Ces mots et les questions qui s'y rapportent seront au Centre des futures discussions multilatérales sur les échanges et les normes du travail. Mais que signifient ces mots, quelle est leur portée juridique et est-ce que leurs utilisateurs les emploient tous dans le même sens? En outre, s'ils sont mal utilisés, il peut arriver que le public comprenne mal les liens entre les échanges et les normes du travail, que ses attentes ne soient pas réalistes et que les progrès visés en soient retardés. Ce document vise à examiner la notion de droits fondamentaux du travail et à décrire certaines difficultés suscitées par son usage intempestif.

The legislation will give municipalities the financial tools they need to decide on the best tax policy approach to suit local needs. However, certain aspects of Bill 106 are perceived to be at odds with municipal interests. This presentation sets out the Association of Municipalities of Ontario views regarding problems with the Bill relating to: the elimination of the Farm Tax Rebate; the elimination of the Business Occupancy Tax; local decision-making; timing of the legislation; property classes and new tax ratios; and unresolved issues.

This handbook assembles information about two subspecies, black cottonwood (Populus balsamifera spp. trichocarpa) and balsam poplar (P. balsamifera spp. balsamifera), which are known to be rapid producers of woody biomass. Both occur over much of British Columbia and there are many ecosystems in the province where these subspecies need to be considered in silviculture prescriptions. The handbook reviews those ecosystems in the province that support the two subspecies, their biology and silvics, their management for both timber and mixed uses, and their future prospects as a forest resource. Management techniques covered include: nurturing cottonwood and balsam poplar in pure natural stands as a source of renewable biomass and to provide habitat diversity; promotion of the subspecies as companions in mixedwood ecosystems; nurturing hybrids for short-rotation production of Populus biomass; and elimination of the subspecies in conifer stands. The purpose of this report is to identify and describe important trends in Canada over the last quarter century, which taken together provide a snapshot of Canada's progress toward sustainable development. Details on issues and specific initiatives can be found in the list of selected readings at the end. This report is not a comprehensive scorecard. Rather, it is intended to illustrate how conditions in Canada have changed, to demonstrate how issues, priorities, thinking, and responses have evolved during a dynamic quarter century, and to highlight challenges that remain in our quest for a sustainable future.

La recherche en énergie représente un moyen privilégié de réalisation des politiques énergétiques et de développement économique. L'inventaire des activités de recherche, développement et démonstration en énergie au Québec en 1992 cherche tout d'abord à mesurer l'effort financier consacré à cette activité de façon globale et pour chacune des formes d'énergie de même que pour l'efficacité énergétique. Il vise aussi à identifier le rôle des différents intervenants et leurs sources de financements, de même que la nature et l'importance des ressources humaines qui sont consacrées à la recherche-développement (R-D). Enfin, l'inventaire donne un aperçu des buts poursuivis par les entreprises et les autres organismes de recherche.

Canada/Ontario memorandum of intent on the management of fish habitat, fisheries rehabilitation and development : report

Ontario. Ministry of Natural Resources. MOI Working Group #4. Kemptville, ON : The Working Group, 1990. vii, 319 p.
MICROLOG 97-05135 (4 fiche)

Canada and Ontario signed a five-year agreement and a memorandum of intent to co-operate on the management of Ontario's fisheries and to clarify roles and exercise responsibilities with respect to fish habitat management. This report summarizes the deliberations of one of the committees established to accomplish this task, the working group on habitat rehabilitation and development. The group's work had two essential components: an examination of the 17 Canadian and binational Great Lakes areas of concern and preparation of a five-year prioritized listing of co-operative fisheries habitat rehabilitation and development projects which could be initiated; and identification of major habitat losses plus preparation of a similar five-year list of habitat rehabilitation and development projects for inland waters and portions of the lakes not designated as areas of concern. The report has been assembled to present project submissions, prioritization criteria, and recommendations separately for the areas of concern and the remaining waters within Ontario. The conclusion summarizes recommendations from both components of the work. Appendices include: background information and information on specific habitat rehabilitation/development projects; a review and comments received on a draft report outlining project proposals; a list of rare, endangered, and threatened fish species; and a table showing major types of fish habitat loss in Ontario.

This report details the assumptions behind the model and the data sources for historic disturbances such as wildfire, forest insects, and different types of harvesting. It then presents model results for biomass and soil carbon pools, carbon fluxes, changes in forest age-class structure, and the model's sensitivity to a change in the assumption that biomass can decline in the overmature growth phase. The appendix includes a summary of a workshop examining the retrospective analysis.

Describes a project that intended to determine the relative importance of the Chelasle River study area to caribou (Rangifer tarandus), to determine whether habitats exist in the area which are preferentially used by the caribou, and to provide habitat management recommendations. The 87,000-hectare study area is located south of Ootsa Lake and north of Tetachuck Lake, east of Tweedsmuir Provincial Park in British Columbia. The area was selected to be larger than a previously defined caribou migration corridor in order to incorporate all observed locations of caribou, which were monitored by radio tracking from spring 1993 to spring 1995. Results presented include degree of use of the migration corridor, and habitat selection by season and within subzones of the area.

The purpose of this study is to foster better understanding on the part of pre-school education and child care policy makers regarding the educational needs and problems facing Chinese immigrant families residing in Richmond, British Columbia, a community that has experienced a recent and rapid influx of Chinese immigration. The study focuses on Chinese immigrant parents' general perception of child care needs. It reviews child care issues related to multiculturalism and cultural minority groups in order to illustrate their influence on issues such as surrogate versus maternal care and early childhood education. The study then profiles Chinese immigrant families as revealed by personal interviews, notes their perspectives on child care and on the teaching of English as a second language, and summarizes parents' concerns related to such issues as child care availability, retention of Chinese culture and language, integration of children into Canadian society, parental involvement in the educational system, and child care quality. Finally, implications for immigrant child care policy are discussed.

The Columbia Basin management plan and corporate strategies – Draft

Columbia Basin Trust (B.C.). S.I. : The Trust, 1997. xxii, 82 p.
MICROLOG 97-05089 (2 fiche)

The Columbia Basin Trust manages assets for the benefit of the region most directly affected by the Columbia River Treaty. This draft document describes a desirable future for the Basin and lays a foundation for the Trust's activities. It also outlines actions planned by the Trust during the next three to five years. It sets out the Trust's guiding principles and core functions and identifies major economic, environmental, and social issues and opportunities to be addressed. Finally, integrated goals as well as economic, environmental, and social goals for the Basin are presented. The addendum to this draft describes the strategies that provide a framework for the Trust's work program and budget. These strategies make a distinction between for-profit and non-for-profit investments and set out criteria for selecting investment priorities. The addendum also considers water management and related matters, plus Columbia River Treaty administration.

L'inventaire des bâtiments historiques d'une municipalité consiste à créer un dossier photographique et écrit des édifices et structures anciens et intéressants que compte une communauté. Les parties contenues dans ce guide expliquent en détail la marche à suivre à chacune des étapes. Ces renseignements sont utiles pour que l'inventaire soit non seulement une réussite, mais qu'il s'agisse aussi d'une expérience agréable et enrichissante. Il est conseillé de garder le guide à portée de la main pendant toutes les étapes de l'inventaire et de le consulter pour répondre à toutes les questions qui pourraient surgir. Vous trouverez à la fin du guide une liste de contrôle comprenant toutes les étapes importantes de l'inventaire. Cette liste permettra à la personne qui dresse l'inventaire de se rappeler la marche à suivre grâce à un simple coup d'oeil. Elle lui permettra également de s'assurer qu'aucune étape importante n'a été oubliée.

Commercial thinning of lodgepole pine : an economic analysis

By Michael Stone. Victoria : Canada-British Columbia Partnership Agreement on Forest Resource Development: FRDA II, 1996. v, 153 p. : ill., Bibl. (Working paper / Canada-British Columbia Partnership Agreement on Forest Resource Development: FRDA II ; WP-6-017)
MICROLOG 97-05188 (2 fiche)

Commercial thinning is a partial harvest of trees in older immature stands where some portion of the trees removed have a commercial value. Commercial thinning currently makes up a very small portion of the total British Columbia harvest, but as the province relies less on its old-growth timber supplies, commercial thinning may become more important. This report describes a simulation study that provides an economic evaluation of commercial thinning of lodgepole pine in British Columbia. The Tree and Stand Simulator (TASS) model was used to simulate growth and yield impacts of a commercial thinning, estimate the potential cost and revenue derived from the thinning and the final harvest, and determine the net present value of the full impacts of commercial thinning. Analysis is limited to consideration of only one commercial thinning per rotation of an even-aged stand. Wherever possible, comparison of simulated results to actual field results has been attempted. In addition, introductory chapters review the biology of thinning and summarize previous research on thinning in lodgepole pine.

This manual is intended for experienced health professionals interested in food-related public health problems. It describes a protocol developed to understand natural food sources of vitamin A:

their availability and use, cultural beliefs surrounding their use, and community perceptions about food and vitamin A deficiency. The purpose of the assessment described in the manual is to provide essential information for program planning aimed at increasing consumption of vitamin-A-rich food among populations at risk for deficiency. It gives careful and complete guidance that can be followed by researchers not generally familiar with ethnographic approaches to data gathering. Steps in the protocol incorporate techniques in public health, anthropology, and field-based nutrition. For each step, the manual defines research questions to be addressed, and guidance on how to collect field data on forms which are included.

The Whitesand First Nation is proposing to construct an elders housing project in a remote community in northern Ontario. To reduce the operating and maintenance costs of the project, it is proposed to provide a small cogeneration facility which will supply both electrical energy and heating. The objective of this report is to accurately determine the energy loads for such a facility. The report describes the project, presents heat loss calculations performed using the CANMET Hot-2000 program, and uses the program to alter various components of the building construction (such as insulation) to show how some improvements in energy efficiency can be made. Finally, it recommends certain changes to building components to decrease heat losses and improve energy efficiency.

Conservation easements are a relatively new stewardship technique which are essentially agreements that set out conservation obligations for a property and are then registered on the land title. A variety of tax benefits can flow to the land owner from agreeing to enter into a conservation easement. The foundation for obtaining such benefits is the appraisal of the easement. This report examines concepts and applications of the valuation of conservation easements in Canada, primarily through appraisal methodologies and applied with income and property tax regimes. Comparisons are made to conservation easement experience in the United States.

En 1989, la province, soit directement, soit par l'entremise du CCRGT, a apporté son soutien à trois projets visant à mieux faire comprendre les questions concernant la RGT et à encourager les débats sur les différentes solutions d'aménagement. Il s'agissait de l'étude de la Commission royale sur l'avenir du secteur riverain de Toronto, l'étude des Options pour une stratégie des espaces verts dans la région du grand Toronto et l'étude des concepts de structure urbaine. Ce rapport place ces trois études dans leur contexte et en donne un bref résumé. Il en examine ensuite les réponses afin de déterminer l'étendue du consensus sur les directions et les principes d'aménagement futurs à prendre pour la RGT.

Presents results from the first monitoring cruise to the experimental fishing area off Langara Island, north-west British Columbia. The survey occurred three years after a seven-year experimental period of unrestricted fishing on rockfish (Sebastes spp.) stocks. Biological samples and catch rate data were collected by 42 bottom trawl hauls deployed in a stratified random design. The report provides data on length, age, and maturity for all commercial species of rockfish by sub-area of the survey area. Biomass estimates and confidence intervals are also calculated for major rockfish species.

Natural-based food interventions are the only sustainable solution to vitamin A deficiency in non-industrialized countries. This book provides a methodology, and demonstrates its flexible application, for an in-depth understanding of the local context critical for designing appropriate interventions based on natural food sources. The methodology is called focused ethnographic study, which provides a holistic framework for viewing issues of food availability within a local cultural and food systems context. In this book, it is applied in communities in the Philippines, Niger, China, Peru, and India to learn about the availability of vitamin-A-containing food; perceptions influencing its use, preparation, preservation, and consumption; and age/gender/illness and other factors that modify consumption patterns. Examples are given of helpful information for planning programs at the local level for alleviating vitamin A deficiency.

It also discusses information controls, privacy issues, and the protection of works, and describes policy models presently discussed or implemented in Canada and other countries. Reference is made throughout to relevant case law, mainly from Canada and the United States, with respect to the possible impacts on all major stakeholders with respect to provider roles and responsibilities, liability criteria, and trends or divergences in court decisions. Sections of the document focus on the following types of Internet content: obscenity, pornography, trade marks, and copyrighted materials. There is also a section discussing civil liability and Internet situations generating such liability.

Details a reassessment of the regeneration, 12-18 years after initial harvesting, of a forest stand near Nipigon, Ontario. The main target species was black spruce, but regeneration data were also collected for jack pine, balsam fir, trembling aspen, and white birch. One objective of the study was to determine the importance of the following factors on natural regeneration: clear-cut strip width, seeding period, and receptive seedbed. Results presented include measured and predicted levels of stocking and density measured 16 and 18 years post-harvest.

Determining the amount a worker is likely to be able to earn in suitable and available employment after an injury, S.45a(3) of the Workers' Compensation Act

Toronto : Workers' Compensation Board, Operational Policy Branch, 1990. 28 p. : ill. At head of title: discussion paper. MICROLOG 97-05247 (1 fiche)

Section 45a of the Ontario Workers' Compensation Act states that a worker who suffers injury resulting in permanent impairment or resulting in temporary disability for 12 continuous months is entitled to compensation for future loss of earnings arising from the injury. The amount of the compensation equals 90% of the difference between the worker's net earnings before the injury and the net average earnings the worker is likely to be able to earn after the injury in suitable and available employment. The purpose of this paper is to propose an approach for determining those likely post-injury earnings. It outlines Section 45a and discusses the statutory factors required to be considered in that determination. It then sets out the steps of the proposed approach and provides example calculations.

This study represents the Commission's first major initiative to examine in detail the motivations, attitudes, and perceptions of Canadians about tourism, travel opportunities, and destinations. Study results are based on a combination of telephone and in-person interviews with over 3,300 Canadians in all regions of the country. The overall purpose of the study is to determine how best to market Canadian destinations and products to Canadians and examine possibilities for import substitution in order to reduce Canada's international travel deficit. The study first presents an overview of the domestic travel market, including size, trip characteristics, travel motivations and attitudes, and future travel intentions. Chapter 3 focuses on the issue of brand loyalty and the potential for import substitution. This is followed by a chapter on destination marketing, examining destination preferences and perceptions of Canada and the United States as travel destinations. Chapter 5 summarizes the philosophy and motivational segments of the domestic market and explores specific opportunities for import substitution among these segments.

This publication assembles review papers by leading researchers in the field of youth and drugs, and is intended to provide front-line professionals with an overview of current findings in adolescent development, drug use, assessment, and intervention strategies. The first two chapters address background issues and research findings in the areas of adolescent development and youth substance abuse, covering such topics as health risk behaviours, characteristics of users, and problem-behaviour theory. Legal issues in the assessment and treatment of alcohol and drug problems are explored in depth in chapter 3. Areas covered include principles of consent to treatment, the concepts of confidentiality and privilege, reporting and record-keeping obligations, and the potential criminal liability concerns for professionals that may arise in the course of treating drug users. The final three chapters review identification and assessment methods, along with intervention strategies including family counselling.

Economic potential of mineral exploration in Australia : evidence from the historical record, 1955-91

This study attempts to provide an understanding of the economic realities of mineral exploration in Australia by evaluating Australia's historical experience in the context of current economic and technological conditions. The impact of current Australian taxation policy on the economic potential of exploration is also assessed, as are the competitive royalty positions of the seven political jurisdictions within Australia. The study focuses on Australian base metal, gold, and nickel exploration during 1955-91. Economic assessments are based on A$9.5 billion of expenditures made during the period and current outlook estimates for 347 deposits discovered and delineated as a result of those expenditures. The study results provide a detailed picture of exploration economics in Australia, including the short-term production characteristics of the economic deposits discovered, the medium-term return from exploration success as viewed from the start of mine development, and the long-term economic potential from the start of exploration. Initial evaluations are made on a potential value or before-tax basis; these are then overlaid by Australian taxation and royalty regimes to evaluate the nature of these appraisals in terms of after-tax investment incentive.

Lodgepole pine seedlings must form associations with ectomycorrhizal fungi in order to grow normally under field conditions. The study reported in this memo quantifies the effect of two site preparations (mechanical screening and ground chemical application) on the diversity and types of such fungi at a lodgepole pine site in the Lillooet Forest District of British Columbia. Seedling root tips were examined by microscope and richness and diversity indices were used to describe and compare the ectomycorrhizal communities from the different treatments over a three year period (1992-94).

Degradation of the electromagnetic (EM) shielding provided by the skin of aircraft during repair is a problem that can be of particular concern. This report presents results of measurements made to examine the effect of repair on the magnetic and electric shielding properties of carbon/epoxy laminates, a type of composite material used in aircraft construction. Conventional techniques used in the repair of CF-18 aircraft, including application of epoxy bonded carbon/epoxy and titanium patches, and use of a bolted aluminium rapid repair patch, were employed in the study. In all cases, the patches were applied over a 75-millimetre hole in an 8-ply AS-4 carbon/epoxy laminate and a transverse electromagnet cell was used for the measurements. The degree of degradation of EM shielding is compared for the two types of patches.

This study examines the effect of Vision silvicultural herbicide (active ingredient, glyphosate) on the soil seed bank of red raspberry. Investigators applied two rates of Vision (1.1 and 1.7 kilograms per hectare) on five dates from July to September 1990 in a young jack pine plantation in north-western Ontario. Soil samples collected in fall 1991 were potted and monitored for red raspberry seed germination under greenhouse conditions for a four month period. Results presented include the effect of Vision on raspberry germination and the interaction between rate and time of herbicide application.

Presents a systematic investigation of the effects of hyperstoichiometry and fission products on the electrochemical activity of uranium oxide (UO₂) nuclear fuel, using cyclic voltammetry and the O₂-reduction reaction. The impact of bulk hyperstoichiometry versus surface oxidation was distinguished through measurements on ceramic UO₂+x standards before and after corrosion in aerated solution. A natural uraninite sample was also evaluated for comparison. Electrocatalysis of the O₂ and H₂O reduction reactions on simulated nuclear fuel (SIMFUEL) was systematically explored using formulations representing 1.5, 3, and 6 atomic percent nominal burnup. The source of this enhanced reactivity was then established through additional studies of neodymium-doped UO₂ and split SIMFUEL materials, which contain either only fission products that are compatible with the UO₂ structure or only noble-metal segregants.

There is a growing consensus among academics and policy-makers that most industrialized economies are increasingly becoming "knowledge-based." Knowledge, both as an input and an output, is seen a key source of long-term growth and job creation. The study examines the relationship between structural change and the employment performance of the Canadian economy over the period 1971 to 1991, using Statistics Canada's input/output model. Though largely based on previous work by the OECD (1992), the study employs more timely data and a finer industrial disaggregation (111 industries as opposed to 33), and explores more closely the employment implications of the emergence of the knowledge-based economy.

Épargne-retraite au moyen des RPA et REER, 1991 à 1995

Le rapport constitue une mise à jour du rapport intitulé Épargne-retraite au moyen des REP et REER, 1991 à 1993", publié en septembre 1995. Il fournit de l'information sur le nombre de Canadiens qui participent à un régime de pension agréé ou qui cotisent à un régime enregistré d'épargne-retraite. Les données proviennent du fichier (facteur d'équivalence) FE/REER, créé à partir d'informations fournies à Statistiques Canada par Revenu Canada. Cette information permet de déterminer qui participe à un REER ou à un RPA, non seulement au cours d'une année mais au cours de plusieurs années. Le but de ce rapport est de décrire le contenu du fichier FE/REER et de donner une idée du genre d'information que l'on peut en tirer. L'analyse ci-comprise fournit les faits saillants des données; beaucoup plus d'analyse pourrait être effectuée en utilisant soit les données de ce rapport, soit des données adaptées aux besoins particuliers de certains utilisateurs.

L'équité salariale signifie qu'un travail de valeur égale ou comparable doit recevoir un salaire égal. Elle exige que l'on compare les emplois généralement exercés par des femmes avec des emplois différents généralement exercés par des hommes. Avec la méthode de comparaison d'un emploi à l'autre, la comparaison est effectuée directement alors qu'avec la méthode de comparaison de la valeur proportionnelle, elle est effectuée indirectement. Ce volume se concentre sur la méthode de comparaison d'un emploi à l'autre. Les points qui y sont abordés sont une vue d'ensemble de l'équité salariale et la mise en route de votre plan d'équité salariale.

Il a été spécialement conçu à l'intention des petites entreprises de l'Ontario. Il donne un exemple de système d'évaluation des emplois que vous pourrez utiliser pour élaborer un plan d'équité salariale adapté à votre entreprise. Il s'agit d'un système utilisable par une petite entreprise. Il existe beaucoup de systèmes d'évaluation des emplois sur le marché et la Commission de l'équité salariale ne recommande pas celui-ci plutôt qu'un autre. Comme vous l'apprendrez dans ce manuel, le plus important, pour mettre en oeuvre les principes de l'équité salariale dans votre entreprise, c'est de choisir un système adapté à votre lieu de travail.

Draft management guidelines for maintaining woodland caribou habitat in northern Ontario require maintaining and renewing large tracts of older forest suitable as caribou habitat. Tourist outfitters in that region have expressed concern over the effect of cutover size and disturbance on tourism in remote fly-in outposts. This study utilizes a remote tourism decision support system (RT-DSS) to explore how implementing those guidelines might affect remote tourism. The RT-DSS models the preference of remote fly-in outpost clients for a total of 25 variables. Only those variables pertaining to shoreline buffer width, cut size, visible cutover area, and other factors relevant to timber management were considered. The effects of the caribou guidelines were compared to those of the status quo in forest management, as represented by guidelines for the provision of moose habitat.

Très souvent, ces renseignements (et les divers services connexes) proviennent du gouvernement provincial. Cette étude découle d'une directive donnée par le gouvernement de l'Ontario en décembre 1990. L'étude analyse la manière dont les gens se procurent des renseignements et le rôle que jouent les centres d'information communautaire pour les aider à se renseigner sur les services sociaux du gouvernement.

The Labour Market Information (LMI) Strategic Initiative has the objective of developing, producing, and distributing high-quality job- and career-related labour market information, and integrating that information into career counselling in order to support the school-to-work transition. This report begins with an overview of the LMI Strategic Initiative and its activities in six activity areas, such as research and data development, information products, and links with other similar initiatives. It then presents a framework for evaluating the initiative, first examining its logic and subsequently providing the context for developing the evaluation methodologies, including the audience for the evaluation, the evaluation issues and data sources, and assessing the feasibility of addressing these issues. Finally, recommendations for implementing the evaluation framework are made. The appendix includes a table of Initiative outputs and an evaluation matrix.

The evaluations are presented as selected case studies. Projects involved restoration of habitat degraded by historic forest harvesting, removal of a natural migration barrier, and the addition of spawning gravel to increase juvenile salmonid production. In addition, results of a series of experiments in a controlled flow channel to investigate the effect of several habitat alterations on salmonid populations under Newfoundland conditions are discussed. Results highlight the importance of hydrological and biological considerations to habitat improvement and restoration initiatives and recommendations are made for future projects.

The rate of corrosion or dissolution of components of an underground nuclear waste vault, and many of the processes that may occur to retard radionuclides leaching from the vault, are controlled by groundwater composition and redox conditions. This paper describes the processes that cause the composition and redox state of groundwater to change along its flow path in crystalline rock formations, citing examples from research areas in the Canadian Shield. In particular, the extent to which oxygenated waters may penetrate the bedrock in a recharge area is examined to determine the potential for oxidizing groundwater to reach proposed vault depths (500-1000 metres). Hydrogeochemical data from the Lac du Bonnet batholith in Manitoba are used to determine and trace the chemical and redox characteristics of groundwater recharging to depths of at least 400 metres. The usefulness of uranium concentration in groundwater as an indicator of redox conditions is discussed.

Studies conducted during the construction of the Underground Research Laboratory indicated an excavation damage zone adjacent to an underground test tunnel driven at a depth corresponding to that of a proposed underground nuclear fuel waste disposal vault. It is expected that such a zone would have hydraulic properties different from those of the undisturbed rock mass, such that the zone might provide new pathways for groundwater flow or contaminant transport from a disposal vault. This report describes a study that used an iodide tracer to characterize the solute transport properties (permeability, transport porosity, and dispersivity) within the intensely fractured part of the excavation damage zone. The experiment was performed by continuously injecting tracer into a region of the zone and monitoring tracer breakthrough 1.5 metres away. An equivalent porous media approach was taken in analyzing fluid flow and solute transport through the zone.

The workplace and employee survey (WES) is a new Statistics Canada undertaking. It is sponsored by Human Resources Development Canada, and is designed to provide an integrated view of the activities of employers and their employees. This is an experimental survey for which a pilot is currently being tested. One topic for which such data would be very important is that of earnings and wages, issues of primary concern for this conference. In Canada, as in other industrialized countries, wage patterns have changed fundamentally, and for reasons not at all well understood. The remainder of the paper is organized as follows: following the discussion of recent trends in earning polarization, we outline the approach and content of the survey, the development activities to date, issues that must be confronted when implementing such a survey, and topics one can address with the resultant data.

In this project, trees were to be measured for diameter, height, and pathological characteristics at three-year intervals until 1988, and at six-year intervals thereafter. The sample plots are located at 85 installations throughout the Vancouver Forest Region. Baseline information on such matters as soil and weather was also collected at each location. This report summarizes the characteristics of each installation and the measurements made. Each installation is presented on a separate page and information provided includes experimental design, plot layout, treatment by plot, number of trees measured, site and soil data, and forest measurements after 18 years.

The goal of this paper is to create greater public awareness of intelligent transportation systems (ITS) and their privacy implications, and to stimulate public discussion. The paper briefly describes ITS and discusses the privacy issues related to ITS: surveillance of specific individuals, limitations of personal autonomy, violations of privacy, and collection of personal information without permission. It then reviews applications of ITS in general, in Canada, and abroad, including travel and traffic management systems, public transportation management systems, electronic toll payment and road pricing systems, and vehicle tracking systems.

Feasibility study to overcome barriers for Aboriginal home ownership

Prepared for Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation and Gignul Non-Profit Housing Corporation ; by D.V. York. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, 1996. ix, 83 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 97-05437 (2 fiche)

This study examines selected socio-economic characteristics of the Aboriginal population of the Ottawa-Hull region, with a focus on the current Aboriginal households occupying rental properties owned and operated by Gignul Non-Profit Housing Corp. Selected demographic characteristics on the Aboriginal individuals and families on the Gignul waiting list are also presented. Based on current income levels of existing Aboriginal Gignul tenants and waiting list applicants, affordable house purchase price ranges are identified. Based on a review of income levels of the Gignul Aboriginal population and housing prices in the Ottawa-Hull region, various options are identified and discussed in terms of ways they can be utilized to assist Aboriginal households to access home ownership. The feasibility of the options developed is assessed, with reference to the overall principle of developing options that do not require on-going subsidy assistance from the federal government. Finally, the study discusses the role that community economic development can play in utilizing housing as a social, economic, and human development strategy.

Describes a recycling facility that has developed a process to recycle fibreglass composite, or plastic reinforced with glass fibre. The facility currently only recycles waste generated during manufacture of parts made from sheet moulded composite, but the objective is to eventually be able to recycle post-consumer material. The process involves shredding, separation of metal, stripping of fibre from resin and filler, and separation into four product streams: chopped strands, milled fibre, coarse filler, and fine filler. Marketing of the final products is also discussed. The appendix includes technical specification sheets.

Financial state of the forest industry and delivered wood cost drivers

Submitted by: KPMG ; Perrin, Thorau & Associates Ltd. ; Simons. Victoria : Ministry of Forests, Economics & Trade Branch, 1997. ii, 99 p. : ill. MICROLOG 97-05019 (2 fiche)

This study examines the financial state of the British Columbia forest industry, examining the increase in 1996 logging cost since 1992, the reasons for such an increase, and regional variations in the increase. Study methodology involved collection of delivered wood cost information from coastal and interior logging operations of major licensees, using surveys completed by 94 operators; and a survey of woodlands staff to gather their estimates of the impact of various cost drivers on each of several cost categories. Two main categories of cost drivers were considered: those corresponding to provisions of the provincial Forest Practices Code and those associated with implementing and administering the Code; and all other factors affecting costs. A copy of the survey questionnaire is included.

The Health Sector Training & Adjustment Program Board of Directors began considering job retention strategies in February 1994 as possible ways to minimize the impact of downsizing on workers in the Ontario health sector. The scope of this report is to analyze the job retention strategies outlined by the Board as requiring further research. It examines the breadth of the health sector, the key characteristics of the subsectors, and the policy and planning issues of the subsectors. Analysis is performed in the context of the changes in the health sector, labour adjustment model ideology, and general principles of the Program. Subsectors considered in the analysis include hospitals, residential long-term care, community long-term care, community health centres, community mental health, public health, and emergency services. Job retention options assessed include job sharing, reduced work weeks, early retirement incentives, voluntary exit incentives, self-funded leave, and contracting out. Appendices include profiles of the province's health subsectors.

Summarizes data from surveys of pests of young stands conducted by the Forest Insect & Disease Survey 1991-95 with the objective of providing an overview of pest problems in young stands treated under the Canada-British Columbia Forest Resources Development Agreement. During the study period, over 140,000 trees were examined in 1,132 randomly selected stands located in 12 biogeoclimatic zones. The stands examined had received one or more of 20 different silvicultural treatments, with spacing and planting being the most common. Results presented include pest incidence and impact, numbers of stands by impact category, numbers of stands with occurrence of pests by pest species and biogeoclimatic zone, and proportion of pest-affected stands by zone and sub-zone.

FRP was developed to help forest planners with area-based harvesting and silviculture planning, and allows planners to designate roads and cutblocks on digital maps and to calculate various costs, revenues, and volumes. The Silviculture Module of FRP enables the user to estimate silviculture costs and forecast forest development on a treatment unit basis. A Harvest Module provides a data structure for basic harvest planning and includes attributes such as timber volume, species distribution, log grades, harvesting equipment, road costs, and harvesting dates. Both modules can be linked to a geographic information system. Information is included on hardware/software requirements, data organization, software utilization, and report generation. The methodology included a telephone survey of 900 Franco-Ontarians, a survey of 321 high school students, and interviews with 11 representatives from public libraries. Surveys were conducted in eight communities representative of centres with a Francophone majority and of centres with a Francophone presence in Anglophone areas. Proposed reforms of the Canada Pension Plan include a large increase in the contribution rate, from 5.85% in 1997 to 9.9% in 2003. This paper discusses an alternative reform: the privatization of the future retirement entitlements promised by the Plan. Under privatization, the increase in contributions would be directed to a system of mandatory retirement savings accounts. Existing Plan contributions would finance the disability, death, and survivors' benefits provided by the Plan, and also service the unfunded liability. Topics discussed include the use of payroll taxes to finance mandatory retirement pensions, the transition to a proposed privatized system, recent international experience with pension privatization, and integration of privatization of Plan benefits with other federal reforms.

It begins by explaining the context and guiding principles of gender-inclusive analysis, which is used to help clarify the influence that social expectations and stereotypes based on gender can have on public policies and programs. It then reviews legislation and policy initiatives that influence gender-inclusive policies/programs and outlines the basic elements of the policy/program development cycle, suggesting ways that gender-inclusive analysis can be incorporated into that process. Eight phases of the cycle are described, from identifying the issue to policy/program evaluation. Includes glossary.

Alaskan-type ultramafic-mafic complexes in British Columbia are potential hosts for commercially exploitable deposits of platinum group elements (PGEs). All Alaskan-type complexes in British Columbia lie within the allochthonous terranes of the Intermontane Belt that were amalgamated and accreted to the cratonic margin of ancestral North America in the Mesozoic. This report examines the geology and PGE/noble metal geochemistry of eight specific complexes, providing information on regional geology and geochronology, structure, metamorphism, petrography, geochemistry, and mineralization. It then discusses PGE mineralization, using the Tulameen Complex and associated placers as a case study, and examines the economic potential of the complexes and their magmatic and tectonic settings.

Users of the Canadian Forest Fire Weather Index System are required to precede computation of the drought code component each spring by first calculating a mathematical model of overwinter recharge of moisture in the forest floor. Limitations of the model, required for operational simplicity, have led to requests for a field sampling procedure that can be used to verify the model when and where desired. This report describes a standard procedure for destructively sampling the forest floor by depth class, oven-drying the material, and comparing the actual moisture contents against empirically derived regression equations of forest floor moisture versus drought code for representative mature coastal and interior British Columbia forests, and for white spruce forests in southern Yukon. The field verification procedures and calibration equations presented will be applicable to drought code start-up at any time during the fire season.

Growth intercept models can compute site index (which measures the capacity of an area of land to grow trees of a given species) from early average height growth of trees. This guide describes a growth intercept model for coastal Douglas fir in British Columbia. The model was developed from a study of 48 analysis plots in which three trees in each plot were selected for intensive sampling, reconstruction of growth history, and calculation of site index and growth intercept. The resulting model consists of 50 functions. Four refinements to the growth intercept modelling technique are introduced, which improve the functional form of the model and improve the data collection and analysis procedures.

An installation containing six permanent Douglas fir sample plots established in 1988 near Williams Lake, British Columbia was intended to provide long-term information about individual-tree and stand dynamics that could be used to explore relationships between various characteristics of stand structure and several measures of tree and stand growth. The objectives of this report are to characterize the growth that has occurred on the plots since establishment in terms of a number of variables including volume and various biomass components, and to relate the growth that has occurred to underlying stand structure conditions in each of the plots. Biomass prediction equations developed for interior Douglas fir are also presented.

The National Pollutant Release Inventory (NPRI) is a federal government initiative designed to collect and make available to the public, on a yearly basis, comprehensive national data on releases to air, water and land and transfers in waste of specified substances. The inventory provides information from all Canadian sectors: industrial, government, commercial and others. Under the authority of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, owners or operators of facilities that manufacture, process or otherwise use one or more of the specified substances under prescribed conditions are required to report to the NPRI. This document enables facility owners or operators to review the NPRI reporting criteria and determine if they are required to report the NPRI for the current year. It also provides guidance for completing the reporting form and filing a report with Environment Canada.

Describes an assessment of artificial and natural regeneration carried out in 12 different locations in the montane coastal western hemlock and subalpine mountain hemlock forests of British Columbia. Survival, growth, and stem form of eight different species, three stock types, and two planting seasons were compared to the growth, stocking, and stem form of naturally regenerated species. The species used in the trials included fir, pine, cedar, and hemlock. A ranking procedure is used to rate the species' productivity, reliability, and feasibility in the two regions studied. An appropriate regeneration strategy is recommended, with certain species providing the basic silviculture resource and others being used to increase the stand value and crop reliability.

Traffic volumes on Highway 69, one of the two routes connecting northern and southern Ontario, have steadily increased to the point where service on two-lane portions of the highway has seriously deteriorated during peak periods. This report presents a proposal for addressing this problem on a 26.5-kilometre segment of the highway in the Muskoka area. It describes the public consultation and issue identification process conducted to examine various solutions to the problem of providing adequate road transportation through the area while satisfying environmental and socio-economic concerns. Sections of the report review the area's natural and socio-economic environment, existing road network, alternatives to the existing Highway 69, selection of corridors and routes for a new four-lane controlled-access highway, and environmental and socio-economic impacts of a new highway. Concludes with descriptions of a recommended route for the new highway, significant issues associated with that proposal, and preliminary technical design issues. Includes glossary.

The second section reviews direct effects of forest cover removal, including effects of direct lake-riparian removal of vegetation on both physical processes and structures and on the chemical properties of the lake itself. Case studies are included to illustrate the form that forestry-lake research has taken to date. The third section summarizes literature on landscape ecology and riparian buffer design. The fourth section reviews recent requirements of the Forest Practices Code of British Columbia Act, with emphasis on the riparian and lake management components of the legislation-directed guidebooks. Chemical aspects of radionuclide dose estimation are usually handled in an implicit rather than an explicit manner. This report discusses the chemistry and chemical speciation of iodine and illustrates how these topics have been implicitly included in biosphere models such as BIOTRAC, the model employed in the assessment of Canada's nuclear fuel waste disposal concept. Iodine is emphasized because iodine-129 is the dominant contributor to the hypothetical doses estimated by the model. The report first discusses the occurrence and physiological role of stable iodine and the speciation of iodine in the environment. It then briefly discusses speciation of other elements important to nuclear fuel waste, such as carbon 14, and explains chemical speciation implicit in various components of BIOTRAC such as food chain model parameters.

Le chômage chronique qui sévit au Canada et dans la plupart des autres pays industrialisés depuis le début des années 1980 a suscité un intérêt prononcé à l'égard de la recherche empirique sur les causes du chômage persistant. La question de l'impôt salarial des employeurs et de ses conséquences sur la création d'emplois est de celles qui sont à l'étude et, si la recherche en la matière a été relativement limitée auparavant, elle attire néanmoins un nombre croissant de chercheurs depuis les années 1990. Ce document consiste en une étude des analyses les plus saillantes faites de cette question, l'accent étant mis sur la recherche empirique menée au Canada. Il a pour but de donner en un seul document un aperçu d'une majorité des travaux consacrés à l'incidence de l'impôt salarial sur la création d'emplois afin de tirer des conclusions. By G. Grant Clarke, Edward DesRosiers and Stephen Hawkins. Halifax : Maritime Provinces Higher Education Commission, 1995. 59 p. : Bibl. MICROLOG 97-04989 (1 fiche)

Describes a study undertaken to determine requirements for information on Maritime universities and how information systems design, data collection, and information flows can most effectively be managed. Study methodology included literature reviews, consultations and discussions, meetings with institutional representatives, and a regional workshop. Begins by examining the context within which the study was undertaken and by identifying critical issues confronting Maritime higher education. A framework for university performance measurement is then proposed covering the key major areas of public policy concern across the range of university functions. Specific issues are mapped within the framework and a range of performance indicators is suggested for each. A data modelling approach is introduced to underpin the organization of an integrated information base and suggestions are made with regard to its management. Finally, comments are presented on existing co-operative efforts and on logistical considerations which must be addressed if any information initiative is to move forward.

The Jericho Residential Program in Vancouver houses up to 40 deaf and hard-of-hearing students aged five to 19 years. The students attend the Provincial Schools for the Deaf in Burnaby. This report outlines the history of the Program and describes and presents findings of an inside quality assurance (IQA) process that was implemented to review the Program. The IQA process employed outside participants who conducted interviews with students, parents, and staff, but also actively involved staff and examined the Program from the students' perspective. Interview responses are summarized with regard to facilities, staffing relationships, support, social milieu, personal development, program activities and rules, transportation. Staff experience with the IQA is also evaluated. The findings are applied to an action plan to address issues raised in the IQA, including those related to safety, staff/child relationships, quality of life, and other issues. The appendix includes a copy of the interview questionnaire.

This discussion paper was developed to respond to a request by Canadian iron ore companies for a comparison of mining costs on a world scale to assist them in determining their global cost competitiveness. The study also identifies market niches and global areas on which iron ore producers should concentrate. It first defines the demand side of the iron ore industry through a review of technological trends and variations in the supply and demand equation, along with descriptions of the European, Asian, and US/Canadian steel industries, plus an exercise in price forecasting. It also outlines the competitiveness of the Canadian iron ore industry, first by describing the industry and that of its main competitor countries, and second by assessing the cost competitiveness of the main companies studied. In addition, it looks at the impact that variations in freight rates and exchange rates have on the competitiveness of suppliers in order to identify global areas where Canadian companies have a lead. Finally, the study examines the problem of vulnerable Canadian mines and the potential for a direct reduced iron or iron carbide plant based on Labrador Trough iron ore.

References to "core" labour standards or "core" labour rights, particularly in the context of developing countries' failure to abide by them, are becoming increasingly common in the press and public discourse. In particular, the United States and France, supported by human rights activists and organized labour, are pressing for the enforcement of "core" labour standards by the World Trade Organization. The term, and the issues it embraces, will be key in any future multilateral trade-labour standard discussions. But what does the term signify in a conceptual and legal sense, and do the various users of the term employ it in the same way? Moreover, inappropriate use of the term may distort public understanding and expectations of the linkages between trade and labour standards and interfere with progress on the issue. This commentary attempts to examine the concept of "core" labour rights, while illustrating some of the difficulties arising from its overly casual use.

This paper formulates a hierarchical approach to forest planning, where harvest schedules are first determined, followed by a decision about harvest methods. The determination of a harvest system regime is expressed as a multiple-objective decision incorporating maximization of net present value and minimization of cumulative soil disturbance for different site classes, subject to maintaining high levels of production, an even flow of timber, and avoiding green-up violations. The search for preferred harvest system regimes is performed over a set of non-dominated harvest schedules, with alternative weights placed on the objectives to reflect values of different stakeholders. The approach is illustrated by application to the Tangier River watershed in south-eastern British Columbia.

Describes and presents results of a 1994 weed survey conducted in Manitoba in 1994 to determine whether differences exist in weed populations among zero-tillage and conventional tillage systems; if so, to determine the nature and extent of those differences so that farmers are better prepared to make weed management decisions; and to evaluate the differences in management practices between conventional and zero tillage systems in the province using a producer questionnaire. Field studies involved weed sampling in fields located in 27 rural municipalities. Weeds were sampled in the spring prior to spraying and in the fall after tillage had occurred in conventionally tilled fields. Results are presented in tables by weed species, showing such parameters as frequency of occurrence, weed density and density range, and relative abundance.

A Market study of Indonesia and Malaysia

Western Canadian Wood Machinery & Services Export Assn. Victoria : Canada-British Columbia Partnership Agreement on Forest Resource Development: FRDA II, 1996. 106 p. : ill., Bibl. (Working paper / Canada-British Columbia Partnership Agreement on Forest Resource Development: FRDA II ; WP 96.09)
MICROLOG 97-05187 (2 fiche)

Presents an analysis of the Indonesian and Malaysian forest sectors as part of a larger project undertaken with the following objectives: to assess the potential for exports of wood machinery and engineering products; and to formulate market development plans for those jurisdictions where export opportunities exist. Begins with a review of the political climate, business environment, and forestry sector in the two countries, then focuses on specific parts of that sector to assess export opportunities. Sectors examined are the consulting engineering and wood panel industry, the sawmill sector, and the harvesting sector. Market strategies for sawmill and harvesting equipment, as well as tactical approaches to marketing in the two countries, are presented. The appendix includes notes on field visits to sawmilling and harvesting operations in the two countries.

Measures to reduce overwinter injury to planted spruce in the boreal forest of British Columbia Summarizes results of a series of studies begun in 1990 with the goal of finding the causes, evaluating the extent, and recommending action regarding the problem of overwinter injury to white spruce seedlings in the boreal forest of north-east British Columbia. In the experimental area located in the Dawson Creek Forest District, seedlings from local seedlots were spring- and summer-planted at two sites. Meteorological conditions were recorded along with observations on pre- and post-winter injuries. Results provide information on the dependence of injuries on silvicultural factors such as site size, site preparation, age of planting stock, planting time, root placement in soil, and exposure to environmental variables, as well as on the effect of overwinter injury on seedling growth and health in the post-injury growing season.

This document is intended as a reference guide on measuring government performance in Alberta. It outlines the role and purpose of Alberta's performance measurement system and why Alberta has chosen to report publicly on its performance. The guide also defines some key terms, describes various types of measures, who should use which type of measure and when, the criteria for selecting measures, and guidelines to follow for public reporting. The guide also discusses the role of performance measures within the context of the government's business planning process, and how measures can facilitate and enhance program delivery and management. This includes outlining the future direction for performance measurement in Alberta. Includes glossary and text of the Government Accountability Act.

Presents a mechanistic model developed to predict the long-term corrosion behaviour of copper nuclear fuel waste containers in a Canadian disposal vault. The model is based on a detailed description of the electrochemical, chemical, adsorption, and mass transport processes involved in the uniform corrosion of copper, developed from the results of an extensive experimental program. Predictions of the model are compared with the results of some of these experiments and with observations from a bronze cannon submerged in seawater-saturated clay sediments. Quantitative comparisons are made between the predicted and observed corrosion potential, corrosion rate, and copper concentration profiles adjacent to the corroding surface as a way of validating the long-term model predictions.

Il s'agit de quelques critères généraux et de principes que la réforme devrait respecter du point de vue des femmes. Le second chapitre traite de l'intégration au marché du travail des prestataires et examine les moyens qui sont suggérés à l'intérieur de la politique active de main-d'œuvre. Le troisième chapitre porte sur la question de la protection sociale, c'est-à-dire des barèmes et des conditions d'accès aux prestations et analyse les réaménagements de la politique familiale qui sont proposés afin de mieux soutenir la sortie de l'aide sociale des prestataires ayant des responsabilités parentales et d'encourager le maintien en emploi des parents qui travaillent à faible revenu. En conclusion, nous rappellerons les conditions de réussite de la réforme.

Dans ce travail, l'auteure établit de nouvelles mesures du taux d'inflation tendanciel à partir des variations des composantes de l'IPC total, dans l'hypothèse où les variations extrêmes de certains prix traduisent des chocs d'offre temporaires et non la tendance fondamentale des prix. Le taux d'inflation tendanciel est mesuré par la médiane pondérée des variations des composantes de l'IPC total ou par la moyenne pondérée de leur distribution réduite d'un certain pourcentage de chaque côté, de sorte que les variations extrêmes sont éliminées du taux d'inflation mesuré par l'IPC total (ou leur effet atténué, dans le cas de la médiane pondérée).

Describes a trial established in 1991 near Ear Falls, Ontario to examine the field performance of black spruce seeded in shelter cones and black spruce seedlings outplanted as transplant mini-plugs on three site moisture regimes. The site had been full-tree harvested, site prepared by disc trencher, and consisted of shallow to bedrock soils that ranged from sand to shallow loamy sand to peaty phase. Survival, height growth, and root collar diameter after three growing seasons are reported. The results indicate a preferred alternative to conventional Presents findings of a review initiated in response to the federal government's stated intention to dissolve the Ports Canada Police. The review was conducted to determine basic and enhanced policing needs at major ports on the lower mainland of British Columbia and to identify a model for delivering those services taking into account such matters as the scope and nature of criminal activity known to exist at those ports, previous reviews of port policing, and resource implications for provincial police agencies. A model is proposed that encompasses three components: site security, an on-site uniformed police presence, and a high level intelligence unit. A funding framework is also proposed and recommendations are made regarding the proposed model, funding, and transition from Ports Canada Police to the local police agencies.

National competition policy philosophies in the Triad : considerations for trade policy

This paper explores how philosophies of competition in the United States, Japan, and European Union countries (The Triad) have shaped the making, interpretation, and enforcement of competition policy and laws in each jurisdiction. The paper documents how competition policies in the Triad countries over the last century have evolved in accordance with economic, legal, and political developments peculiar to each jurisdiction, which are, in turn, influenced by their underlying competition philosophy. It is argued that the competition policy approach is basically economic in the United States, political in the European Union, and legalistic in Japan; that competition policies occupy a spectrum ranging from individualism to communitarianism; and that recognizing, understanding, and respecting the key motivations and the stage of economic development behind the differences in competition policy are essential steps to avoiding conflict and progressing towards a co-ordinated and globally effective competition policy.

Summarizes results of investigations carried out in groundwaters from the Whiteshell Research Area in southern Manitoba and the Aikokan Research Area of north-western Ontario to determine the concentrations, size distributions, and compositions of natural particles in Canadian Shield groundwaters. Particles from the groundwater were isolated by ultrafiltration under a nitrogen atmosphere and particle concentrations and size distributions were determined by filtration and by laser-based particle counting and size analysis. The work is part of geochemical studies carried out in support of the environmental impact statement (EIS) to evaluate the concept of nuclear fuel disposal at depth in crystalline rock of the Canadian Shield. The results indicate whether the combined concentration of colloid size fractions of natural particles in Shield groundwater is sufficient to have a significant effect on radionuclide migration within both the EIS case study and a recently completed in-room emplacement case study.

Describes a research trial established in 1986 in southern interior British Columbia to study the effectiveness of glyphosate applied at three and at six litres/hectare, and of manual cutting, to release naturally regenerated lodgepole pine seedlings and suppress dry alder complex. Pine seedlings and two target species, Sitka alder and fireweed, were assessed for the first three years and again in the ninth year following treatment. Measurements made on the seedlings included height, current-year height increment, and stem diameter at root collar. Target vegetation was assessed for species-specific percent cover and the height of one average target specimen per woody species was also measured.

In 1992, the Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources established an independent Policy Advisory Committee to develop recommendations for conserving old growth forest ecosystems in Ontario. As part of its mandate, the Committee conducted a public consultation program including open forum discussions, workshops, question and answer sessions, and notes taken from telephone calls from the public. This report summarises input from the public consultations, with regard to the four sets of discussion points: landscape management, protection of old-growth forests, forest management, and socio-economic evaluation. It also discusses other issues vital to old-growth conservation which were identified by the public during consultation, including public education about forest ecosystems, a perceived domination of forest policy by southern Ontario interests, and First Nations jurisdiction.

Oldman River Dam, June 1995 flood : summary report -- Rev. no. 2

Prepared by: Alberta Environmental Protection Water Resources Operations Division. Edmonton : The Division, 1995. 35 p. : III., Maps

An extremely rare meteorological event occurring on June 6, 1995 (intense rainfall in the foothills) resulted in an inflow into the Oldman River Reservoir of 3,500 cubic metres per second at peak, which was reached in 12 hours from an initial inflow of about 300 cubic metres per second. Both the magnitude of the peak and the time to peak exceeded the 1:1000 year design hydrograph of the reservoir system (a peak flow of 2970 cubic metres per second with a time to peak of 33 hours). This report describes the events leading up to June 1995, the hydrology of the Oldman River Dam catchment area, the flood warning and hydrologic events, and dam operations during the flood. The effect of the dam operation on reducing downstream peak flows is noted, and recommendations for improvements in case of future flood events are presented.

Examines disinfection by-product (DBP) concentrations in drinking water as a function of treatment practice, season, and location in the distribution system for each of three water treatment plants that applied different treatment processes (chlorine-chloramine, chlorine-chlorine, and ozone-chlorine). Investigators collected monthly data on DBP concentrations in raw water samples and in treated water samples from four locations in the distribution system at each plant. Major DBPs observed included chloroform and dichloroacetic acid. Factors affecting the observed DBP concentrations are noted and the ability of sampling events to capture a complete image of DBP behaviour in drinking water is discussed. Optimizing residential forced-air HVAC systems : final report

Allen Associates. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage & Housing Corporation, Technical Policy & Research Division, 1996. iii, 112 p.
MICROLOG 97-05436 (2 fiche)

This study examines technical issues of residential forced-air space conditioning systems incorporating heating, ventilation, and cooling in the context of increasingly energy-efficient new housing. It reviews and analyzes current technologies and practices with a view to improvements, and also examines existing and emerging technologies and strategies. A comparison of conventional and improved design strategies is presented for a house with a five kilowatt heating load, and a performance model framework is given to enable comparative assessment of installed systems in terms of comfort, indoor air quality, energy, environmental impact, and life-cycle cost. The study makes numerous recommendations to improve delivery of functions and affordability, such as shorter ductwork, duct sealing, flexibility of register location, and variable-flow, high-efficiency fans. The study also proposes changes to resource and training documents and regulations, and identifies future research which would be required to accelerate the move to more optimized forced-air systems.

Release of radionuclides from a proposed underground nuclear waste disposal vault, and their subsequent transport to the surrounding geosphere, would be determined by the geochemistry of the disposal vault and the surrounding geosphere. Organic substances affect the geochemistry of radionuclides through complexation reactions, by affecting the redox of certain radionuclides, and by providing food for microbes. The purpose of this study was to determine whether the buffer and backfill materials proposed for use in the vault contain organics that could be leached by groundwater in sufficient quantities to complex with radionuclides and affect their mobility within the disposal vault and surrounding geosphere. Buffer material was extracted with deionized water to determine the release of dissolved organic carbon, humic acid, and fulvic acid. Effect of radiation and heat from the nuclear waste was simulated by various heat and radiation treatments of the samples tested. Results are presented showing the amount of complexable organics leached and the effects of heat and radiation on the amount and nature of leachable organics.

La production commerciale de l'orge nue est relativement récente au Canada, le premier cultivar ayant été créé il y a à peine dix ans. Par contre, les travaux d'amélioration de l'orge vêtue classique destinée à l'alimentation du bétail (surtout des bovins) datent d'une centaine d'années. Ce document porte précisément sur l'orge nue et examine la production et l'alimentation animale. Les points abordés sont : comparaison entre l'orge nue et

It became apparent, during the winter of 1989-90, that the Troxler soil moisture-density gauge was going to be phased out, at Orono, due to its high cost and the problems with federal licensing. The trial was developed with three objectives: to see if a SMRC (soil moisture retention curve) developed using tensiometers to determine soil moisture tension and a convection drying oven to determine soil moisture percentage (by weight) would produce a SMRC similar to a three year average Troxler SMRC; to check soil moisture percentages (by weight) obtained using a convection drying oven against the percentages obtained by drying small samples in a microwave oven; and, to determine the differences in soil moisture tension at three levels in the rooting zone of the 3+0 white spruce by placing tensiometer sensors at the 5, 10 and 15 cm levels in the soil and recording the measurements.

Reports on a project that consisted of the design, construction, and monitoring of a contour trench sewage disposal system to replace failed conventional septic tank and bed systems in four northern Ontario houses. The system consisted of a single disposal pipe laid in a gravel trench constructed in imported fill which follows a single contour, permitting the effluent to take advantage of lateral flow along a single gradient. The system was fed by four forcemains, one from each house, where new pumping chambers and pumps were installed to pump the sewage effluent out.

Presents and discusses catch and effort data (1981 and later) on invertebrate fisheries on the Canadian Pacific coast. Information presented includes quantities landed, value of catch, quotas, and numbers of licenses and vessels. Issues affecting the fisheries are also discussed, such as under-reporting, fisheries management, overfishing, lack of biological data or stock assessment, and fishery monitoring. The information is organized by specific fishery in three categories: mollusks (clams, squid, octopus, abalone), echinoderms (sea urchin, sea cucumber), and crustaceans (shrimp, prawn, crab, euphausiid, barnacle).

Since the early 1980s, chronic unemployment problems in Canada, as well as in most other industrialized countries, have prompted a heightened interest in the empirical research of the causes of persistent unemployment. Among the areas examined has been employer payroll taxes and their effect on job creation. Although research in this area has been relatively sparse, it has become a more popular area of study in the 1990s. This paper is a survey of the more noteworthy analysis performed in this area with an emphasis on Canadian empirical research. The objective is to provide a single locus where much of the work relating to the impact of payroll taxes on employment can be presented and from this, to draw conclusions. Part 1 gives a brief overview of federal payroll taxation in Canada and the perspectives of various stakeholders with respect to the impact of payroll taxes on employment. Part 2 provides an economic primer designed to familiarize the non-economist reader with the concepts and terminology referred to later in the paper.

Peninsula Harbour is located near Marathon in the northern part of Lake Superior. The harbour area is one of the areas of concern identified by the International Joint Commission for preparation of Remedial Action Plans. Areas of the harbour have been designated as 'hot spots' because of high levels of contamination from industrial sources. This report describes field investigations and results conducted at one of these 'hot spots', a mercury-contaminated area located in Jellicoe Cove, Peninsula Harbour. Investigations included collection and analysis of lake bottom sediment samples, evaluation of lake level and wave climate, hydraulic analysis, and an estimation of the current, wind, and wave influence on the feasibility of using clay to cap the 'hot spot.' The critical flow velocity for use of capping materials as well as other capping considerations are discussed.

Bien que largement fondée sur des travaux antérieurs de l'OCDE, notre étude fait appel à des données plus à jour, à une ventilation industrielle plus poussée (111 industries au lieu de 33) et elle analyse plus à fond les répercussions sur l'emploi de l'émergence de l'économie du savoir.

The main objectives of this study are to review the literature on economic theory of multiple use of forests, and to compare current integrated use forestry practices in British Columbia with an alternative system which defines, and incorporates in a unit plan, a zone where timber production dominates. The two systems are compared in terms of timber supply, net timber values, and environmental indicators at three timber management intensities (basic, medium, and high). Theoretical findings from the literature review are empirically tested by simulation with spatial explicit models (ATLAS and SIMFOR) in a sub-unit of the Revelstoke Timber Supply Area. The results indicate the potential of the zoning approach for achieving sustainability of timber and non-timber resources.

The experiments assessed the relative merits of applying selenium (as NaSeO₃) as a chemical binding agent and applying wood ash, wood chips, and clay as physical binding agents. The experimental substrate was mercury-contaminated sediment from Peninsula Harbour in Lake Superior. Amphipods and white suckers were exposed in the laboratory to determine the treatment effects on bioaccumulation. Treatment effects on depuration rates for contaminated amphipods from the harbour were also examined. The results indicate the potential of the experimental treatments for amelioration of areas with mercury-contaminated sediment.

By Keith M. Somers. Toronto : Ministry of Environment & Energy, 1997. iii, 35 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 97-04965 (1 fiche)

Power analysis involves a group of statistical techniques that are used to assess the ability of a study to detect a significant difference when it truly exists. It utilizes a number of factors such as event size, number of samples, and the probability of incorrectly rejecting a true null hypothesis to estimate the likelihood of correctly rejecting a false null hypothesis. This report introduces the concept of power analysis and its use in optimizing studies, and discusses unresolved issues in the use of power analysis in environmental studies. Examples are provided of power analysis calculations for a Student's t-test, a one-way analysis of variance, and a simple linear regression, all involving some kind of environmental or ecological study. Practical applications of power analysis in decision making, selecting indicators, and assessing the minimum detectable change are also discussed.

This report, the fourth annual one, is designed to place cancer in perspective for the people of Ontario. It is based on a population health approach. That is, it looks at those options that have the greatest potential for improving the health of our province as a whole. This discussion begins with a review of what has been accomplished in fighting cancer so far, as a basis for planning our future tactics. The report then examines our range of options and points us in the direction that can give us, as a society, the greatest health benefits.

The prolific growth of clonal shrubs and trees poses a particularly difficult problem for conifer regeneration. In view of the need for a better understanding of the autecology of non-crop species for effective control of competing vegetation and enhancement of silvicultural success, a study was conducted in a northern Ontario jack pine plantation that was experiencing competition from trembling aspen, pin cherry, green alder, and beaked hazel. This paper summarizes that study, which investigated regeneration behaviour, population dynamics, and competitive ability of the competing species. Stem density, age-related mortality, recruitment of stems, and the nature of above- and below-ground clonal dynamics were determined through both non-destructive and destructive sampling.

Regional governance : a foundation for a new social vision : a discussion paper

Edmonton : Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities, 1997. 11 p.
MICROLOG 97-05013 (1 fiche)

This paper begins by exploring the ideas behind shared governance, or the rationale behind reducing the role of government in Alberta. It then proceeds to analyze the cumulative impact of these ideas upon Alberta's society, with discussion of implications for persons with disabilities. It defines the vision of Alberta inherent in these ideas a vision which is predominantly economic. It next assesses the implications for individuals and communities and discusses the potential of regional governance to support a new social vision. That vision is rooted in strong regional identities which buffer the volatility of an economic vision hinged to dynamic global markets. That vision is also rooted in the empowerment of communities and their assumption of responsibility for their own economic and social development. The paper concludes by questioning how prevailing approaches to public policy and management need to change to facilitate such regional governance.

Regulatory reform action plan -- Rev.

Edmonton : Alberta Education, 1996. 21 p. ISBN 0-7732-5192-8
MICROLOG 97-05075 (1 fiche)

The main purpose of Alberta Education's regulatory reform is to ensure alignment of school board plans with government directions for education through modification or elimination of regulations, policies, and other departmental operating procedures and practices that have become cumbersome and outdated and that hinder school boards in carrying out their tasks responding to the educational needs of students. The objective of the reform is to reduce costs and to accelerate and improve decision-making in education. This document lists the guiding principles of Alberta Education's regulatory reform, a list of deregulation actions since 1989, and a regulation review schedule. The appendix includes a table that describes all of the components of Alberta Education's legislation framework that provides important information across many organisational levels.

Relations of terminal growth and specific leaf area to available light in naturally regenerated seedlings of lodgepole pine and interior spruce in central British Columbia

Describes a study conducted to: determine the terminal growth potential at optimum light environments for lodgepole pine and interior spruce on different sites in British Columbia; to quantify the responses of terminal growth and specific leaf area to light availability across a range of site qualities; and to compare the changes in growth and specific leaf area in relation to light availability between the two species and among sites with different soil moisture availability. Study sites (19 pine and 14 spruce) were located near Smithers and consisted of a clear-cut adjacent to a mature stand. Study sites supported the growth of well-established, natural regeneration of one of the two study species, and exposed seedlings to a variety of light conditions. Fitted regression lines are presented for the various light/growth/leaf measures studied.

The Relationship of walleye production in Lake Nipissing to spring water levels at the start of walleye spawning

The presence of walleye, a predator fish, in Lake Nipissing is largely responsible for maintaining a balance in the lake's fish community. There is concern over the water level in the lake required for successful spawning so that adequate stocks can be maintained. This report describes an examination of the relationship between walleye production in the lake and the water level at spawning time. Study methods included index trawl netting for young of the year and yearling walleye, recording of water levels at Wasi Falls, and regression analyses. An optimum water level for start of spawning is identified.

Ce document est une analyse essentiellement conceptuelle du renforcement de la confiance envisagé comme méthode de gestion de la sécurité. Bien qu'elle commence par un examen critique des idées traditionnelles sur le renforcement de la confiance (dont certaines proviennent de mon étude d'il y a 12 ans), son objectif principal est de formuler une doctrine contemporaine générale de la démarche de renforcement de la confiance. L'analyse critique met en lumière certains problèmes qui continuent de miner les théories conventionnelles à ce sujet. Ce document porte sur le renforcement de la confiance dans le contrôle des armements. Les points qui sont abordés dans ce document sont les suivants : la notion de renforcement de la confiance avant le document de Stockholm; la pensée contemporaine sur le renforcement de la confiance; et, la doctrine de transformation du renforcement de la confiance.

At the second meeting of this group, concerns were raised about the slow progress of the government, and the Ministry of Health in particular, toward improving access. The immediate goal of the Task Group of Abortion Service Providers has been to identify the key barriers that perpetuate unequal access to abortion services in Ontario, and to develop strategies to overcome them. The long-term goal is to ensure that every woman in Ontario - regardless of her first language, how much money she has, her race or origin, or where she lives, has access to safe and supportive abortion and related reproductive health services in her own community. This document presents a report on access to abortion services in Ontario. Topics covered are: government commitment and co-ordination; current provision of abortion services; accessibility and expansion of abortion services; and, towards comprehensive health care.

Dans ce volume, nous accordons une attention particulière à l'environnement urbain, élément majeur du programme d'Habitat II. La situation de l'environnement urbain est d'une importance capitale en ce qui concerne la santé et la qualité de vie des citoyens dans le monde entier, et elle est susceptible de grever irrémédiablement le développement économique et social. Nous faisons également l'inventaire d'un certain nombre de tendances actuelles de l'environnement planétaire et nous traitons de leurs conséquences probables. La plupart de ces tendances signalent des problèmes qui vont en s'aggravant, et cela suggère qu'un grand nombre d'objectifs nationaux et internationaux en matière d'environnement ne seront pas atteints si l'on n'entreprend pas une ample réforme des politiques et que l'on ne procède pas à des changements significatifs dans les pratiques et les stratégies actuelles.

This report constitutes an update of the report entitled "Retirement savings through RPPs and RRSPs, 1991 to 1993" published in September 1996. It provides information on the number of Canadians who belong to employer-sponsored registered pension plans or contribute to Registered pension plans or contribute to Registered Retirement Savings Plans. The intention of this report is to describe the contents of the (pension adjustment) PA/RRSP file and the type of information that can be generated from it. The analysis included in this document provides some highlights from these data; much more analysis could be done using el-ther the data in this report or data customized to the particular needs of users.

At some point in their lives, most Ontario residents need information about "human services," broadly defined to be services provided by Government or the community in health, housing assistance, social services, employment assistance and income support. Very often, this information (and the associated various services) comes from the provincial Government. This study is the result of the Ontario Government's directive in December, 1990. The review looks at how people get information and the role of Community Information Centres in helping people find government human service information.

By Brian L. Scarfe. Victoria : Ministry of Environment, Lands & Parks, 1997. iii, 47 p. : ill.

This report was prompted by a request for a comprehensive review of the circumstances that led to ice jams and flooding in communities downstream from the Nechako Reservoir in British Columbia in late fall 1996. It begins with a description of the Nechako Reservoir system and its operation as a component of the Kemano power generation project. It then reviews reservoir management objectives regarding energy production, fisheries resource protection, flood protection, and recreational use; reservoir inflow forecasting procedures; and the 1996 water year and events leading up to the fall flooding and ice jams. Finally, it analyzes the roles and responsibilities of those responsible for reservoir operation, assesses water management of the reservoir during 1996, identifies public concerns regarding reservoir operation and watershed management, and presents conclusions and recommendations directed toward reviewing and strengthening the reservoir operating procedures.

La RGT (Région du grand Toronto) figure parmi les territoires urbains de l'Amérique du Nord qui ont connu la croissance la plus rapide. La vigueur traditionnelle de son économie, la diversité de sa population multiculturelle et son mode de vie attrayant ont fait de la Région une destination de choix pour les habitants du Canada et du monde entier. Ce document de travail décrit le but visé par la Province à l'égard de la RGT. Il précise les valeurs qui, de l'avis du gouvernement et d'autrui, devraient sous-tendre une stratégie de gestion de la croissance, et il brosse un tableau de ce que pourrait devenir la RGT au cours des 30 prochaines années si l'on prend les mesures qui s'imposent dès maintenant.

Le débat public sur l'énergie lancé par le ministre des Ressources naturelles a été engagé de façon concrète à la faveur du séminaire d'information tenu à Québec, du 6 au 10 mars 1995. Plus de 150 personnes, représentant divers secteurs d'activité, se sont inscrites et ont participé à cette première session de travail. Ces quatre jours de discussions et d'échanges de points de vue visaient, parallèlement, un double objectif. Il s'agissait tout d'abord de soumettre à un examen critique le document de consultation élaboré par les responsables du Secteur de l'énergie du ministère des Ressources naturelles. Ce document représente la lecture effectuée par le ministère des éléments qui devraient être intégrés dans une nouvelle mouture de la politique énergétique du Québec. Le séminaire a en fait procédé à une restructuration des axes de cette éventuelle politique et à l'intégration de certaines préoccupations considérées comme fondamentales. Ce document présente le rapport final du comité d'experts et d'information.

The public debate on energy initiated by the ministère des Ressources naturelles was officially launched at an information seminar held in Quebec City from March 6 to 10, 1995. Over 150 representatives of various activity sectors registered for and took part in this first work session. The four days of discussions and exchanges had two objectives. The first entailed a critical review of the consultation document prepared by the energy sector of the ministère des Ressources naturelles. This document represents the ministry's interpretation of elements that should be included in Québec's new energy policy. Indeed, the seminar served to restructure the main lines of thought of this new policy and integrate a number of concerns considered to be fundamental. This document presents the final report from the Committee of Experts and Information.

South Moresby Forest Replacement Account : Annual report 1993-94

Management Committee for the South Moresby Forest Replacement Account (B.C.). Queen Charlotte, BC : The Committee, 1994. iii, 10 p. On cover: Canada-BC Queen Charlotte Islands Regional Economic Development Initiative.
MICROLOG 97-05203 (1 fiche)

The South Moresby Forest Replacement Account (SMFRA) was created to offset the reduction in timber supply and the loss of forestry jobs that resulted from the creation of the Park Reserve and subsequent withdrawal of land from timber production. Established in 1988, SMFRA is a multi-year program promoting enhanced forest management and providing economic opportunities through the forest sector for the people of the Queen Charlotte Islands. It is jointly funded by Canada and British Columbia. Projects fall into 3 basic components: operational forestry enhancement, research and demonstration, and communications. This report describes management of the fund, which is administered from the Queen Charlotte Islands Forest District for the federal-provincial Management Committee. Expenditures are outlined and the client situation is described. Next, activities are described for the 3 main areas, further divided into operational silviculture, forest health, and inventory. An appendix provides more detail on individual projects.

Presents data on one aspect of a multi-disciplinary study investigating the physiology and behaviour of adult sockeye in aquatic conditions, simulated in the laboratory, representing those found in Alberni Inlet. The Inlet has persistent hypoxic conditions related to a naturally slow flushing rate and the biological oxygen demand from pulp mill effluent. The study examined combined sublethal effects of hypoxic fresh water and sodium pentachlorophenate, a metabolic poison that enters aquatic ecosystems from its utilization in the agriculture and timber industries. Changes in sustained swimming performance and respiratory frequency were used as indicators of sublethal effects. Ventilatory and cough frequency of the salmon were monitored in relation to normoxic and hypoxic conditions under two temperature regimes, and during acclimation in salt water. Fish length, weight, and sex were recorded at the end of each experiment. Scale samples were collected for age determination, and bile and liver samples were analyzed to assess the effects of sodium pentachlorophenate on steroid metabolism.

The second section outlines a comprehensive set of activities for school-based tobacco use prevention. A mix of activities that can occur in schools is suggested along with possible roles for public health professional staff. The final section addresses the curriculum component, providing a synthesis of the literature and criteria to develop and evaluate programs and resources for smoking prevention, based on both theoretical and practical matters.

Describes the development and use of a surficial geology database that integrates four original surficial geology map sources in Ontario into a common classification, combines digital terrain data with the surficial geology theme, and is available digitally in geographic information system formats. The data sources, which provide coverage for southern, central, and northern Ontario, were digitized using SPANS software and classification schemes employed in the individual regions were reconfigured to produce a single set of classes applicable to the province as a whole. The resulting provincial classes include bedrock, moraines, eskers, glaciofluvial and lacustrine deposits, limestone and shale plains, drumlins, dunes, and beach ridges. Instructions for using the database available on CD-ROM are provided, and include sample screens.

Presents a study of Ontario drivers who had their licenses suspended in 1986. Study methodology consisted of two research phases: coding, data entry, and analysis of records of 4,616 randomly selected suspended drivers; and in-depth telephone interviews with 1,511 suspended drivers. Results provide information on the drivers' demographic characteristics, license characteristics, current driving habits, 1981-86 driving record, the difficulties created by the 1986 suspension, behaviour during the suspension, characteristics of those who drove or did not drive during suspension, attitudes of suspended drivers, and post-1986 driving record. The appendix includes details on the survey methodology and a copy of the survey questionnaire.

On s'est servi de techniques de méta-analyse pour déterminer les domaines de prédicteurs et les instruments d'évaluation actuels les plus efficaces pour prévoir la récidive chez les délinquants adultes. À partir de 131 études, on a recensé 1 141 corrélations avec la récidive. Les domaines de prédicteurs les plus puissants étaient les besoins criminogènes, les antécédents criminels et le comportement antisocial, les réalisations sociales, les facteurs liés à l'âge, au sexe et à la race et les facteurs familiaux. Parmi les prédicteurs moins solides, on a relevé le fonctionnement intellectuel, les facteurs de détresse personnelle et le statut socio-économique de la famille d'origine. Les domaines de prédicteurs dynamiques étaient au moins aussi efficaces que les domaines statiques. Des recommandations sont présentées en vue de l'établissement de pratiques d'évaluation solides dans le domaine correctionnel.

Solutions to the problem of creating meaningful, ecologically sustainable work in forest-dependent communities are being pioneered in parts of Washington and Oregon where massive job losses and severe environmental degradation have occurred in the forest sector. Communities in those areas have responded with training initiatives in watershed restoration and ecosystem management. This report examines six retraining programs in Washington, Oregon, and northern California that taught displaced timber workers about ecologically sustainable work in the woods. The study approach was to interview program participants and co-ordinators to learn about issues that arose and how they were handled. Issues examined included the elements of successful retraining, cultural considerations, inclusion of ethnic groups, and the future of the ecological restoration industry. The ethnographic research process used in the study is also discussed.

The transmission mechanism for Canadian monetary policy is the chain of developments that begins with the Bank of Canada's actions in adjusting the supply of settlement balances to financial institutions, traces the effects of these actions on financial markets, and works through the resulting changes in spending, production, employment, and prices. This compilation of papers focuses on the early part of the transmission mechanism: the path between the actions of the Bank of Canada and financial market outcomes. The first paper describes all the stages of the transmission mechanism. This is followed by papers on the implementation of monetary policy by the Bank, including cash management and buy-back techniques; the effect of eliminating reserve requirements; the use of monetary conditions indicators; the links among interest rates, exchange rates, total spending, and inflation; the role of economic projections in monetary policy formulation; and Bank of Canada operations in financial markets.

In 1983, Environment Canada began development of a network of lakes in eastern Canada to allow tracking of changes in water chemistry and determine correlations with emission control developments. Network design involved selecting lakes in areas sensitive to acid deposition, susceptible to changes in atmospheric pollution, and lacking land-based acidic pollution sources. Lakes in four national parks met these criteria and water samples were collected by Environment Canada and Parks Canada staff. This report has three purposes: to assess the data collected to determine whether quality control can be maintained in a program employing a large number of different people; to assess trends in lake acidification chemical parameters, comparing data with results from previous analyses; and to provide general water chemistry information on small lakes thought to be typical of prevailing limnological conditions. Water parameters monitored include pH, calcium and magnesium, acid neutralization capacity, sulphate, and dissolved organic carbon.

Black Creek is one of the most prolific coho salmon producing streams on eastern Vancouver Island. Salmon habitat along the creek has been subjected to increasing pressures by encroaching urban development, agriculture, and forestry practices. This paper analyzes current land use within the Black Creek watershed and compares this to land use in 1976. It also examines the use of terrain resource information management (TRIM) data sheets to identify watercourses and evaluates the role of extensive ground surveys in verification of information derived from aerial photography. Methodology and costs for developing base maps of land use patterns and drainage channels are described, and the project cost for developing a geographic information system application for the Black Creek watershed is estimated.

Water plant optimization study : Cornwall water treatment plant, project no. 7-2037

By W.J. Hargrave, P.C. Steele and A.L. Loucks.
Toronto : Environment Ontario, 1990. 175 p. : ill.
ISBN 0-7729-3279-4
MICROLOG 97-05072 (2 fiche)

Describes a plant investigation and process evaluation study conducted at the Cornwall Water Treatment Plant to review the present conditions and determine the optimum strategy for contaminant removal at the plant, with emphasis on particulate materials and disinfection processes. Sections of the evaluation report cover the source of raw water for the plant; flow measurement methods and water consumption; process components, including separation equipment and chemical systems; plant operations such as flow control, screening, quality control, and chemical dosage; and plant performance, including particulate removal efficiency, turbidity removal, and disinfection efficiency. Concludes with recommendations regarding short- and long-term modifications for achieving improvements to plant operations. The appendix includes tables of operational data.

Western hemlock yields predicted by STIM growth model

By J.W. Flewelling. Victoria : Canada-British Columbia Partnership Agreement on Forest Resource Development: FRDA II ; Canadian Forest Service, Pacific Forestry Centre, 1995. 34 p. : ill. (Working paper / Canada-British Columbia Partnership Agreement on Forest Resource Development: FRDA II ; WP-1.5-004)
MICROLOG 97-05181 (1 fiche)

STIM is a model designed to project existing stands of western hemlock, with the additional ability to estimate initial conditions in young stands. These capabilities allow STIM to construct yield tables. This report briefly describes the running of the STIM model and presents yield tables selected to illustrate some of the key features of STIM and to allow various aspects of the predictions to be compared on a marginal basis. Six regimes are defined for yield table generation, and the complete set of six regimes is shown for five site indices in the British Columbia coastal hemlock wet maritime zone. Graphs are used to highlight some of the differences between regimes.

What we heard : a national consultation on primary health care

Federal/Provincial/Territorial Advisory Committee on Health Services (Canada). Victoria : The Advisory Committee, 1996. ill, 247 p. : ill., Bibl.
ISBN 0-7726-2985-4
MICROLOG 97-05192 (3 fiche)

The Federal/Provincial/Territorial Advisory Committee on Health Services launched national consultations on primary health care in 1996. These included one national and four regional round tables, a primary health care questionnaire, written submissions and informal consultations, and media analysis. This report summarizes a number of themes and important areas of agreement that emerged throughout the consultations, as well as the wide variety of views on issues where there was no consensus. Themes and issues included the primary health care framework, the strengths and weaknesses of the current health care system, primary health care organization, the role of regional health authorities, to whom and on what basis should health care funding be allocated, how individuals should be linked with health care providers, and how providers should be paid. Appendices include: an overview of media coverage; speeches by final speakers at the national round table; a copy of the questionnaire and a summary of its findings; and outlines of comments at the small group sessions.

Wildlife and contaminants in constructed wetlands and stormwater ponds : current state of knowledge and protocols for monitoring contaminant levels and effects in wildlife

Christopher D. Wren...et al. Burlington, ON : Environment Canada, Environmental Conservation Branch, Canadian Wildlife Service, Ontario Region, 1997. ill, 112 p. : ill., Bibl. (Technical report series / Canadian Wildlife Service ; no. 269

Part I of this report examines best management practices for efficient function of constructed wetlands and the contamination occurring in constructed wetlands as revealed in case studies. It also conducts a preliminary risk assessment to biota using the available information, showing possible impacts to populations of aquatic invertebrates, fish, and benthic invertebrates. Part II contains a protocol for monitoring the contamination and efficiency of contaminant removal by constructed wetlands, and for determining the effects on wildlife inhabiting these sites. The purpose of the protocol is to develop a reliable database for further guidance on this matter. Three levels of monitoring are recommended: baseline information such as wetland size, mean depth, flow characteristics, water chemistry, watershed land use, and water/sediment toxicity; level I monitoring to determine wildlife habitat and use patterns and to define baseline chemical levels in various ecosystem components; and level II monitoring to quantify pollutant effects in wildlife inhabiting the wetland.

Williams Lake Timber Supply Area : rationale for reconsideration of allowable annual cut (AAC) determination, effective March 31, 1997

By Larry Pedersen. Victoria : Ministry of Forests, 1997. 16 p.
MICROLOG 97-05265 (1 fiche)

The Williams Lake Timber Supply Area (TSA) covers about 4.9 million hectares in the Cariboo-Chilcotin region of British Columbia. In a December 1995 determination of the allowable annual cut (AAC) for the TSA, the land base contributing to the timber harvest was considered to be 34% of the total land base. Since this determination was completed prior to the designation of 324,000 hectares of Class A provincial parks in the TSA, a judicial review directed a reconsideration of that determination. This document presents the rationale for that reconsideration, reviewing how the new parks were considered in the 1995 determination of AAC, the principles for incorporating timber supply impacts of land-use plans in AAC determination, and the application of those principles. It then describes calculation of the revised land base for timber harvesting, analyzes the combined consequences for timber supply resulting from removing newly protected areas from the land base in conjunction with other factors, and explains the rationale for the resulting AAC determination. The appendix contains relevant sections from the British Columbia Forest Act and a Ministry of Forests letter regarding economic and social objectives.

Wind Valley Natural Area management plan

Canmore, AB : Alberta Environmental Protection, Natural Resources Service, 1997. 49 p.
ISBN 0-7732-5117-0
MICROLOG 97-05001 (1 fiche)

Wind Valley Natural Area comprises 7,890 hectares of protected Crown land adjacent to the Bow Valley, east of Canmore, Alberta. It contains alpine, sub-alpine, and montane zones and is managed by the provincial Dept. of Environmental Protection. This document presents a plan, developed by Environmental Protection staff in consultation with stakeholders and the public, directed at managing use of the Natural Area. The overall objective of the plan is to ensure the maintenance of ecological integrity and biodiversity within the Area, particularly for wildlife. The document reviews the biophysical resources and land use in the Area and provides guidelines for management direction of the Area for a variety of uses, issues, and activities. Issues covered in the guidelines include resource conservation, habitat and species management, reclamation of disturbed areas, education and research, recreational use, resource extraction, site development, administration, and role of volunteers. The appendix includes an office consolidation of the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves & Natural Areas Act and a list of species found in the Area.

In 1987 the Northwestern Ontario Forest Technology Development Unit (T.D.U.) began operation serving the Ministry of Natural Resources and forest industry in both the North Central and Northwestern regions. The overall goal of the T.D.U. is to improve timber an integrated resource management practices, primarily in the boreal forest, by transferring knowledge gained from research and field experience and by developing opportunities for integration of this new knowledge into operational activities. This report describes the Unit's program output for the year, covering a review of project submissions, technology management, technology transfer, program strategy, development/demonstration projects, multi-year projects, and projects administered by the T.D.U. using other sources of funding. It includes a cost summary.

The number of hours Canadians spend at work continues to be a topical issue in the 1990s for several reasons. Certain issues may have a significant impact on the preferences of Canadian workers towards worktime. Faced with high unemployment rates, a more unequal distribution of worktime, and shifts to temporary, part-time and contract employment, Canadian workers may prefer to change their work patterns in an attempt to insure themselves against future uncertainties in employment. This document looks at what Canadian workers prefer. Topics covered are: the data; Canadian workers' preferences towards worktime; multivariate analysis; and, implications of the results.

Working together for health and safety, the impact of joint health and safety committees on health and safety trends in Ontario

Ontario. Workplace Health & Safety Agency. Toronto : The Agency, 1994. v, 73 p. : ill., Bibl.

This paper documents the role of management and labour co-operation and the impact that it has had on workplace safety and health in Ontario since the late 1970s, particularly with regard to the impact of joint health and safety committees. Study methodology included: a literature review of relevant research conducted in Ontario and elsewhere; examination of work-related accident, lost-time injury and fatality rates for Ontario and the rest of Canada to determine patterns and trends over the past two decades; and gathering of case study or anecdotal information on the impact of joint health and safety committees and changes in occupational health and safety policies, as revealed through interviews with managers and workers at four workplaces considered to be occupational health and safety success stories.

WorkSafe, logging industry focus report

Vancouver, BC : Workers' Compensation Board of British Columbia, Prevention Division, Research & Evaluation Section, 1996. 63 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 97-04944 (1 fiche)

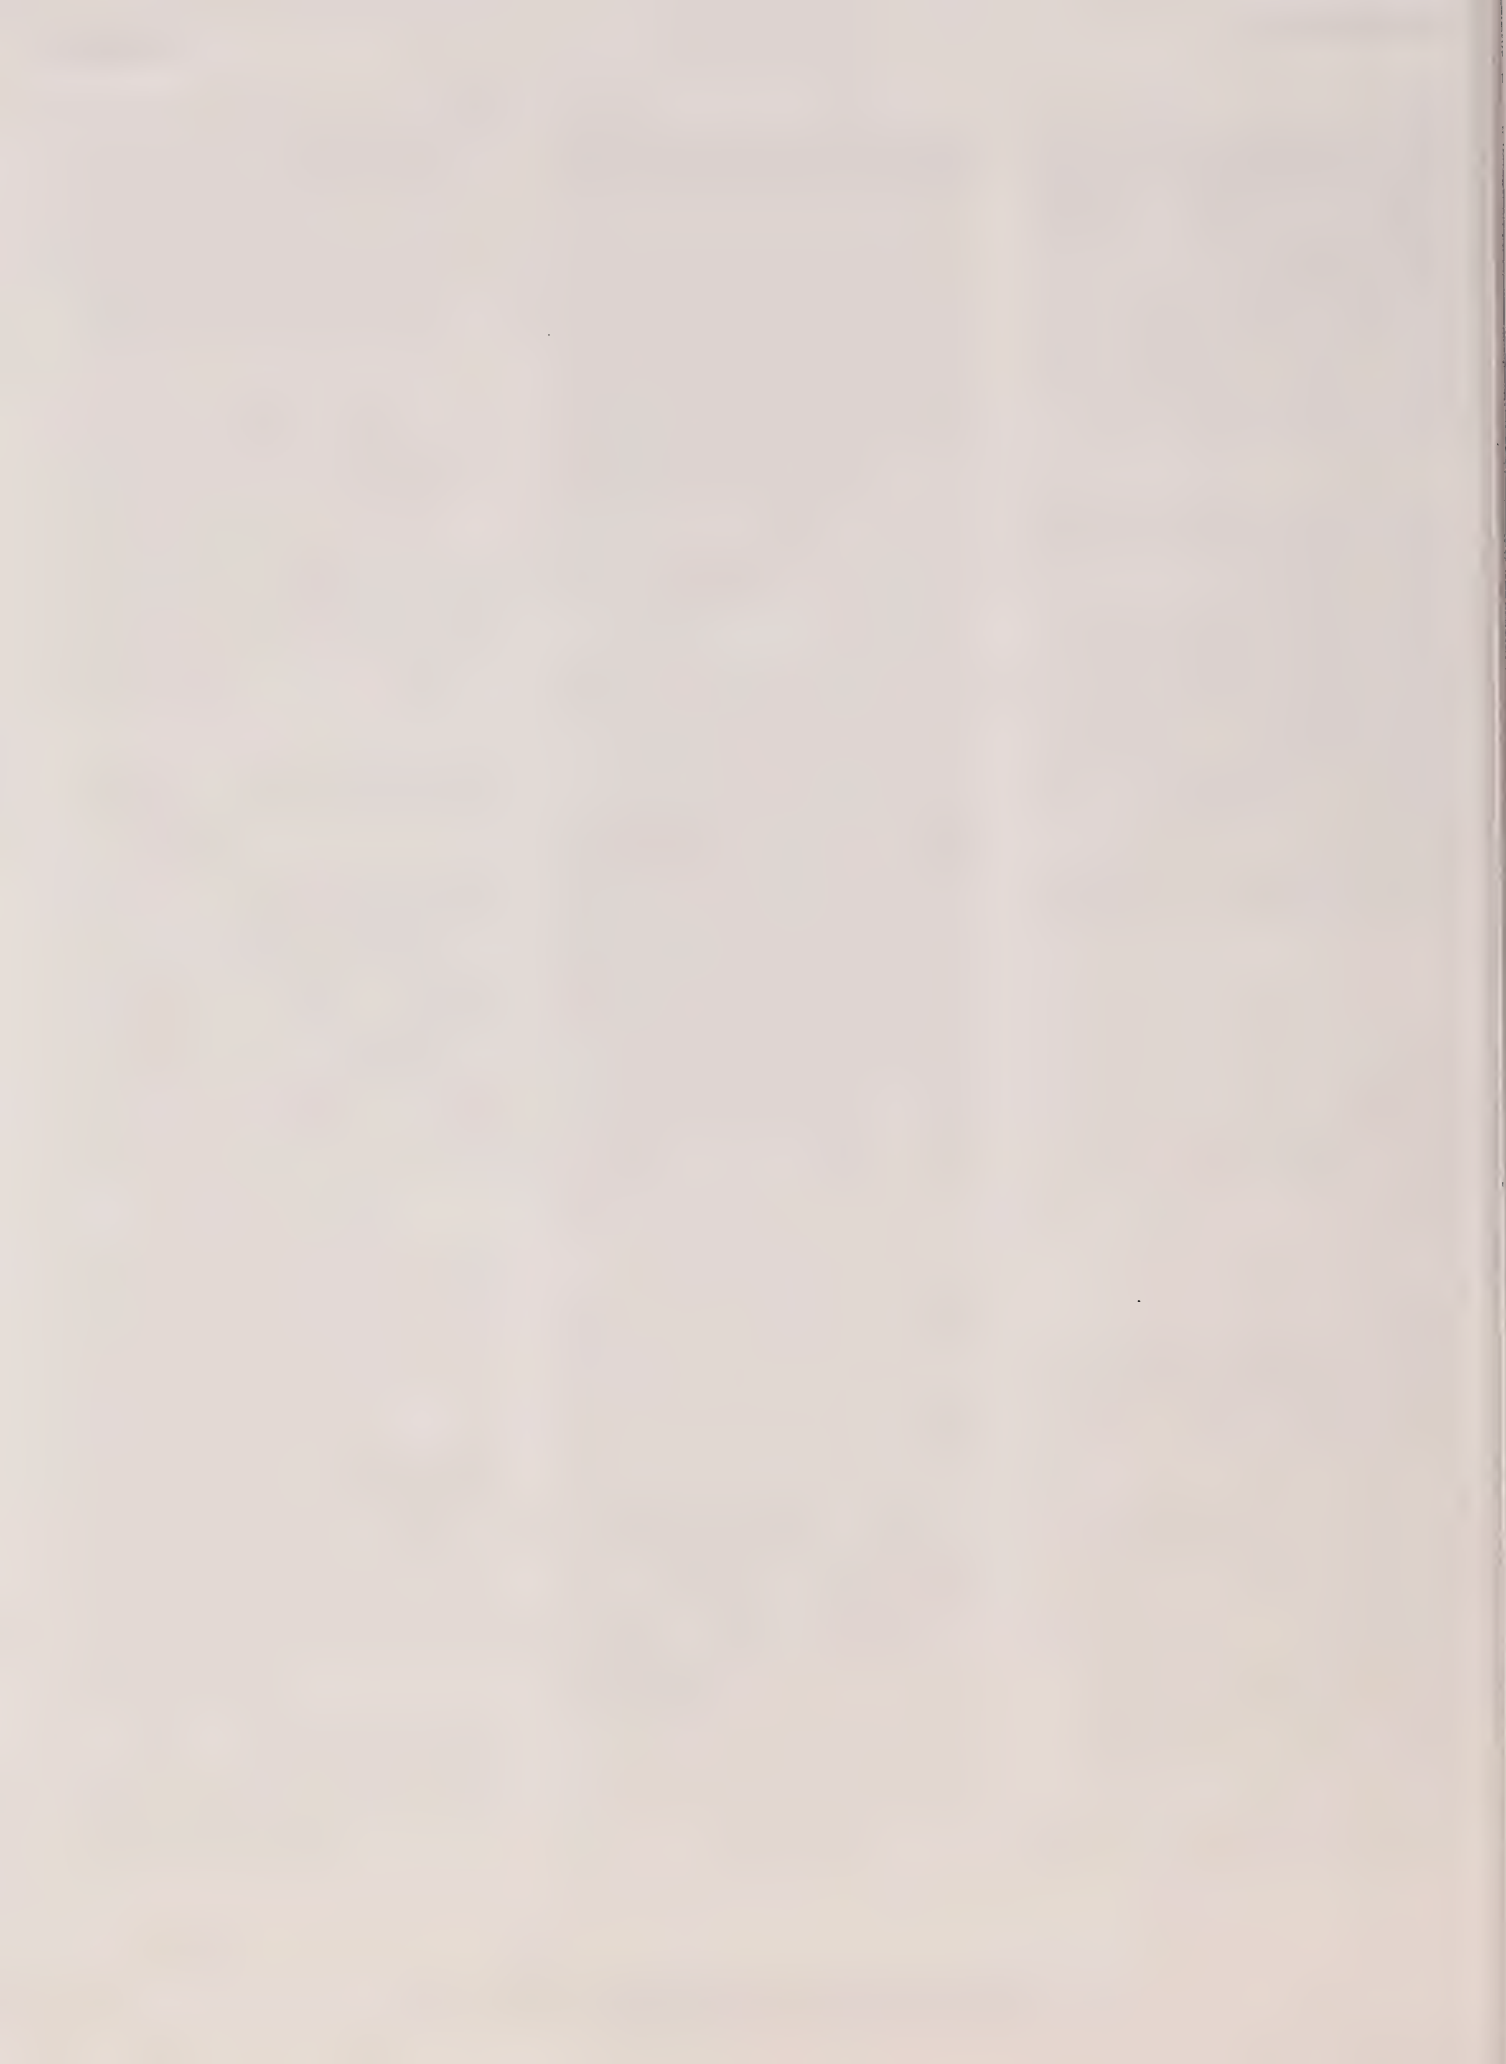

Begins with a presentation of information on employment in the British Columbia logging industry 1991-95 as indicated by gross payrolls submitted to the provincial Workers' Compensation Board. This is followed by an overview of industry fatalities by year, by Board service delivery location, by occupation, by age, and by month of accident. Following the information on fatalities is a section on serious claims, a term used to describe all short-term, long-term, and fatal claims accepted by the Board. Information is presented on the industries within the larger logging subclass where the predominance of claims has been occurring, what kinds of injuries have been sustained, what kinds of accidents have been occurring, the time of year that these accidents occur, and the occupations and age groups most at risk for serious accidents. Next follows information on days lost to, and claims costs of, accidents and injuries in logging, as well as a more in-depth analysis of accidents by occupation. Finally, detailed breakdowns are given of the accidents in the seven regions that accounted for 80% of the serious claims.

Zoobenthos surveys in the Gregg and McLeod Rivers, 1985

By Anne-Marie Anderson, David O. Trew and Karen A. Saffran. Edmonton : Alberta Environmental Protection, Water Management Division, Water Sciences Branch, 1997. viii, 82 p. : ill., Maps, Bibl.
MICROLOG 97-05004 (1 fiche)

This report focuses primarily on the use of benthic invertebrate communities as a biomonitoring tool to assess the impacts of coal mining and other activities in the McLeod River Basin, an area of Alberta that contains a wealth of renewable and non-renewable resources including coal, oil and gas fields, forests, and fish/wildlife stocks. Investigators surveyed three areas of the basin in 1985: the Gregg River; the upper McLeod in the area of Luscar Creek near Cadomin; and the lower McLeod near Edson. Multivariate statistical analyses were used to compare samples from different sites within these areas. Water quality samples were also collected from mainstem and tributary sites in 1984 and 1985. Results indicate the impacts on zoobenthos of the Gregg River Resources strip mine, The Cardinal River Coals Ltd. Luscar mine, and the Edson waste water treatment plant. The appendix contains analytical data.

Other Canadian Reference Sources

- Available from Micromedia -

Canadian Index

A comprehensive index providing access to nearly 100,000 citations each year from: nine major daily newspapers, over 200 Canadian trade and business periodicals, over 50 specialized Canadian trade magazines for which indexing is unavailable elsewhere, and more than 350 general periodicals.

KIOSK: CBCA

KIOSK: CBCA is a reference tool which combines a high quality indexing and abstracting database (CBCA) with direct access to the fulltext content of the articles indexed.

CBCA Fulltext

CBCA Fulltext provides fulltext access to Canadian periodicals and current affairs information, and incorporates the largest and most comprehensive subject guide to periodical literature. CBCA Fulltext allows searching on Windows, Macintosh, DOS and UNIX platforms.

CBCA OnDisc

CBCA OnDisc is the Knight Ridder CD-ROM version of the Canadian Index, giving you access to ten years of indexing. It includes every citation in the Canadian Index, plus thousands of informative abstracts which do not appear in the print edition.

KIOSK: Maclean's

Published in cooperation with Maclean's magazine, KIOSK: Maclean's contains every article and news report published by Canada's Weekly Newsmagazine over an eight year period.

CNI Clips: Press Clippings on Microfiche

CNI Clips is a unique service which provides the full text of more than 40,000 Canadian Press news stories and feature articles each year, and is delivered in a practical and economical microfiche format.

Canadian Education Index

Canadian Education Index covers more than 200 Canadian education periodicals, as well as reports and monographs from the educational research community across Canada. In addition, the Index covers report literature from government agencies, educational faculties and teachers' associations, and large school boards.

Canadian Education Index Thesaurus

Canadian Education Index Thesaurus is a bilingual controlled vocabulary of over 5,000 terms, developed for the indexing and retrieval of French or English-language material in Canadian education, and is an invaluable research aid for users of the Canadian Education Index.
